"Mother Jones'" record—the Pinkertons have it in full—is as red as any light that blazes in the "tenderloin." Mary Harris is her alias; she is past 60 years old and is Irish born. In the late eighties she began to be known in the tough quarters of the Western cities—in Denver, Kansas City, Omaha and San Francisco—as keeper or inmate of disreputable houses. Drink and the excesses common among women of that class put an end to a brief season of prosperity; she sank quickly. Even that long ago her vulgarity, viciousness and cold-blooded brutality were matters of remark in the slums which she frequented.

It was when she made a failure of living the shameful life that "Mother Jones" turned her talents to the fostering of anarchy among laboring men. She first achieved prominence as a labor agitator in the railway strike of 1894. Ever since then she has carried the red flag wherever labor has been leaping at capital's throat. Her gospel may be condensed into one of the fiery phrases which she used last Sunday night:

"Take your bullet and your bayonet and clean the troops and officers off the face of the earth." Her creed has always been that unions were for fighting and not for work. In every labor difficulty in which she has taken part she has incited her followers to armed resistance of the law, to burning and to killing. No wonder, then, that the miners' central organization has kept her on salary for the last four years; no wonder that Hearst booms her when his propaganda of discontent languishes, and no wonder he is silent about her when she appears just as he is reaching for the reward he wishes to confer upon himself.

"Mother Jones" is even more pernicious than Johann Most and Emma Goldman. She belongs to the Czolgosz section of anarchism, but unlike the assassin of McKinley she wants somebody else to strike the blow and bear the consequences. We are glad to have seen her at close range. The next time Hearst tries to install her among the saints of his calendar we shall know what to do and say.

IMPURE FOODS.

The News Letter has the satisfaction of knowing that its recent editorials on "Pure Food" have had a wide-spread effect. The departments at Washington have been stirred to action, and the Commission to Establish Standards for Pure Food is sitting in New York. A strong lobby, at the head of which the names of such men as Charles M. Ams of New York, Walter Williams of Detroit, R. M. Remnitz of Boston, and John T. Cox of New York, is found, has associated itself under the title of "The Association of Manufacturers and Distributors of Food Products," and it is working with might and main to make the people believe that almond husks are splendid spice, that salicylic acid and apple parings make the very best kind of catsup, that boracic and benzoic acids are delightful table delicacies.

Dr. R. G. Eccles of Brooklyn almost gave the members heart failure when he boldly announced that preservatives in food were good things, preserving health and prolonging life. He contended that salicylic acid was harmless and that if the plain people only knew how much good it would do them they would clamor for it.

Prof. Harvey W. Wiley, chief chemist to the United States Department of Agriculture, who conducted the famous "poison squad" experiments in Washington, wanted to know if preservatives were so good, why it was possible to get too much of them.

Dr. Eccles said the pasteurization of milk was now opposed by many physicians because it produced an intestinal disease not hitherto known.

Charles M. Ams, speaking for the manufacturers of preserves in New York, said he did not regard glucose and coloring matter as harmful. Sixty per cent of the "jellies" made in the United States, he said, are imitations—that is, that they are not composed of fruit and sugar, but of glucose and coloring matter. Some jellies, he said, contained no fruit at all.

In discussing the standard for "compound jellies," such as the mixing of apple and raspberry, the committee announced that such articles should be labeled to show exactly the percentage of each fruit used. The representatives of the manufacturers said that if compound jellies were forbidden, at least 75 per cent of the factories in the United States would have to close.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT.

In a few weeks the Republican party of the United States will meet in convention at Chicago. There is only one thought in the minds of its delegates, and that thought is the endorsement of President Roosevelt. A vice-President and a platform will be accepted at the dictation of the President. The platform will contain a clause calling for a revision of the tariff, with the protestation that no such revision can be entrusted to any other than the party of protection. This plank will furnish food for thought at the Democratic Convention at St. Louis.

It is a challenge to those who are clamoring for the immediate revision of the tariff, and it throws the gauntlet down boldly enough. Business disaster did come in 1893. Whatever politicians may think about the matter, the commercial world is convinced that it came as the result of revising the tariff. Nor is there any doubt that uneasiness would be the result of the success of any party not only favoring what is called tariff reform, but having the power to alter the rates. This is not likely to be invested with much significance at St. Louis, where reformers of the raving variety are apt to congregate. Most of them would, if they could, assail the schedules with an ax.

There will be no scarcity at St. Louis of visionaries who have cures for everything. The business world is not looking for either specifics or advice at the hands of quacks. It may have something to learn about its troubles, but it will not rely upon politicians as sources of information. They aggravate rather than palliate. From the evils of capitalization commerce seems to be recovering, if slowly, surely. The process appears likely to continue. To those who desire nothing more than freedom from interference, satisfactory assurances are likely to be forthcoming at Chicago. The tariff plank to be presented there is a protection proclamation. It is a promise that well enough will be let alone. It is out of the question to suppose that any such assurance will find its way into the Democratic platform, but it is not too much to ask that the radicals be kept at a respectful distance.

Perhaps the most damnable feature of the labor union is its merciless and brutal tyranny. It is a mighty machine in the hands of greed, avarice and hatred. Its walking delegates wax fat on the industrial misfortunes of the country. They are crows in the public cornfield.

HEARST AN ENEMY OF THE FLAG.

William Randolph Hearst aspires to become President of the United States. If his aspirations were ever realized he would be the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, yet at Santa Cruz last week his followers and his manager, Michael L. Tarpey, in his name publicly insulted the army of the United States, and openly proclaimed that in their opinion it is a disgrace to wear the uniform of the army of this country. Here are the facts in the case: The citizens of Santa Cruz recently made a tour of the State booming their town, and on that trip took with them the Thirteenth Infantry Band. They found the band all right, and when it came to engage the music for the Democratic Convention at Santa Cruz they hired the band for the gathering. The band arrived at the time agreed upon and proceeded to serenade the various headquarters, including those in the Odd Fellows' Temple, which were under the Hearst banner and had Mr. Tarpey for manager. They played "See! The Conquering Hero Comes," and Mr. Tarpey appeared smilingly to acknowledge their courtesy, until some one suggested to him that the Musicians' Union would not be friendly to Mr. Hearst if they allowed the military band to play before his headquarters. Immediately Tarpey sent word to the band to go away and not to appear near the Hearst headquarters again. More than that, the local reception committee was notified that the band must not play in the convention hall, and that another band must be hired. The committee sent back word that as they were hiring the band they would hire any one they chose, whereupon the Hearst crowd announced that they would not attend the convention if the band was allowed to play there; consequently, to save all trouble, the band performed on the porch of the hotel and the convention went without music.

If this is not disloyalty to the flag it is dangerously near it, for there is not a wide margin between hatred of the uniform and of the flag which it follows. Do the people want for President a man who thus publicly insults the army of the United States? It is true that the Santa Cruz Convention has publicly endorsed Hearst and his acts. It is true that it has condoned his treason to his own party; that it has put the seal of its approval on his treatment of White, of Lane, of Maguire, of all the other leaders and candidates of the Democracy in this State whom he could not control, but that was a matter of interest only to Democrats. If they think Hearst is a bigger man than Stephen M. White, if they think his defeat of Lane was what they wanted; if they admire him for denouncing men whom Democratic conventions had nominated for various offices time and time again they have a right to say so, and they have said so, and by their chosen delegates have declared that Hearst is by far the greatest man the party has ever produced in this State, and that they admire and approve of party disloyalty, and believe it should be rewarded by an election to the Presidency; but the people who are not Democrats, who are first of all Americans, who believe that even a labor union should have no right to insult the American uniform or trample on the American flag will neither admire nor approve of the action of Manager Tarpey at Santa Cruz when he ordered the soldiers of the United States to cease serenading his chief. They will see in it an insult to the flag that they will be quick to resent, and they will not give their votes to a man who treats with contempt the uniform of his country at the dictation of a walking delegate. Some of the unions in their teachings have come dangerously near treason, and Hearst seems willing to follow them on that dangerous path. Perhaps, though, he will declare that Tarpey acted without authority, and like his editors on the Examiner, is disobeying the orders that come by leased wire.

PRESERVING LANDMARKS.

Although the immense amount of detail work done by the Outdoor Art League toward ultimate purchase of the Calaveras Grove of Big Trees has not resulted in any visible advance of the cause, it is not possible to measure the influence for good that has been extended over the United States to its farthest limits.

For reasons that are not difficult of understanding, the issue did not come before Congress in a form for final action. Despite the fact that influences have been at work in the interest of the owners of the grove to prevent action by the national law-makers upon the basis of $250,000 or $300,000, the cause of the trees might have had a hearing this session if the Speaker of the Senate had an ear to "lend" to those anxious to press the measure up for consideration. For financial reasons and because he has some scruples about the establishment of precedents, the Speaker quite frankly ignored the matter, except as it was originally presented, and sent to its rightful committee.

There is a prospect of a long campaign for the trees, one that will require all the patience and tact of the earnest women and some men who have given of their time and means to arouse a sentiment for the purchase of the Big Trees that cannot be ignored. Whiteside, the owner, wants all the money he can get for the wonders that came into his possession; the Government is getting delightfully paternal in the care of the attractions of this country, the things that cannot be reproduced, once destroyed, but it is not willing to pay fancy prices for what in the open market could be had for an honest, rational price—something expressing its real value; enthusiasts let their temperature run up into fever degrees when they think that the trees are in danger, and the owners get up such a scare just about once in so often. Conservatives figure calmly and show for physical reasons that the trees are in no immediate danger. It would not pay the owner to blast them to pieces; besides, they know full well that in good time the trees must be worth more standing than broken up into four-foot wood or in any other length, for that matter.

 LIBRARY TABLE

Dorothea. Maarten Maartens deserves a place by himself, for he is almost, if not altogether, the only writer of power and originality who comes forward to-day as an apologist for Christian graces. There are plenty of writers who make religion a theme, plenty who exploit that fragile plant, exploit it in a double sense, both as literary material and as a means for procuring the bread which perishes. The Sunday school libraries are full of little abominations which should revolt the grown-up imbeciles who place them there, and as a matter of fact do revolt the sturdy youngsters whose uncorrupted good sense will not tolerate their absurdities. Some there are who read them and grow up into the miserable little weeds which are to-day the all too common exemplars of the Christian graces. Maartens is not one of these writers. He knows his world, not a little, too, of the flesh and the devil, and knowing, he is not ashamed to still state his belief that the old virtues are man's best support, and that the Galilean has not lost his hold even to-day. He is one of the few really able men who can smell violets through patchouli powder.

The novel, and it is a novel of nearly six hundred closely-printed pages, is a story of a girl who was pure in heart. In the midst of all sorts of temptation and lowered standards, she still kept unsullied not only her actions, but her view point, which is all the difference. She was educated in a little Dutch village, and that puritanical, simple life, with its insignificant pleasures, its inherent belief in right and wrong, its narrow but steady round of duties. Its strict standards and its physical cleanliness, was her salvation. It is a plea for an old-fashioned education for girls, but an imposisble plea, a belated plea, and one that will fall on deaf ears. The old standards are gone, and young women no longer respond to their demands.

Dorothea is brought up by two maiden aunts, foolish, sweet and good creatures, just the sort of maiden aunts that all girls should have, if they are to possess a healthy disdain for mere educational accomplishments and intellectual powers. The maiden aunts are innocent goodness personified. They are harmless as doves, and not being apostles, the wisdom of the undovelike is not necessary for them.

Dorothea's father is an English military adventurer, a man of distinguished bravery, but who is of the earth exceedingly earthy, and has a fondness for the seamy side of life, so long as it is socially comme il faut. He introduces the girl to Monte Carlo. There she had a splendid chance to go wrong, but does not take it; in fact, with the perversity of innocence, she naturally picks up the best people in the neighborhood and marries a German gentleman, a very fine specimen.

It is needless to speak of the writing, the author is too well known for that. The fault is that too much is undertaken in one book. There are too many wanderings away from the main characters, and too many unimportant people are introduced, though all, even the secondary characters, are well-drawn and individual.

Maartens has the prodigality of genius. He throws his material recklessly away because he has so much of it. It is a fine, healthy, noble sort of book, appealing to those feelings which Dickens and the masters have generally chosen to arouse, but which our modern men have taught us to sneer at and disown. In spite of the super-refined, and acknowledging the allurements of the obvious, there is still something to be said for Maartens in a generation to which his Master might have employed the epithet "wicked," and perhaps that other adjective which reads so much better in King James's version than in a respectable review of a modern piece of writing.

The book is well bound and typographically unimpeachable.

"Impressions Quarterly," published by Paul Elder & Co., June number, contains an article by George Wharton James summarizing the early contributions of Ina D. Coolbrith to the "Overland Monthly." Her "Blossom Time" is reprinted in this article to show the cheerfulness of the poet's nature. It is as follows:

"It's O my heart, my heart!
To be out in the sun and sing;
To sing and shout in the fields about,
In the balm and blossoming.

"Sing loud, O bird in the tree,
O bird, sing loud in the sky!
And honey-bees blacken the clover beds—
There are none of you glad as I.

The leaves laugh low in the wind,
Laugh low with the wind at play;
And the odorous call of the flowers all
Entices my soul away.

"For O but the world is fair, is fair,
And O but the world is sweet;
I will out in the gold of the blossoming mold
And sit at the Master's feet.

"And the love that my heart would speak
I will fold on the lily's rim,
That the lips of the blossom, more pure and meek,
May offer it up to Him."

FINANCIAL

Politicians as Flood Regulators.

The recent convention has done one thing good, if not eventful, in carrying out the deep-laid plans of the weaving spiders responsible for its conception. It has shown the people of the State the motive behind the scheme, which is nothing more nor less than to get somebody to take up the burden of making land valuable for somebody else. There should be no difficulty in keeping the channels of the Sacramento and San Joaquin in a condition to handle the surplus water if it is wanted for the forty days and forty nights which we are asked to believe was sufficient to float the chips from Noan's shipyard over the snow-crested peak of Mt. Everest in the land of Ind. If the owners of land along these river courses would resort to the modern dredger as the means of reclaiming the lowlands and raising their levees to a height sufficient to withstand the rush and sweep of winter torrents, which in excessive volume are punctuated by decades, there would be no necessity for appeals upon their part for help from the public. If a man owns a thousand acres along the Sacramento, why in the world should he not take care of it himself. If he has not the money to protect his crops from destruction by an overflow of river water, why does he plant them? It is not the business of the public if he chooses to make an idiot of himself by taking risks which no sane man would do. It is not in business partnership with him, and the partition of profits are heard of when the season is prosperous and fortune smiles. A corporation composed of the land owners themselves, paying their own secretary and engineer, and other expenses of the management, would be proper, the necessary funds to be provided for by the levy of an assessment, as some one suggested before the convention. How the old tuft-hunters chortled with glee at the suggestion of an opportunity to fasten themselves upon another fat proposition, with openings innumerable for political preferment and a chance to get their cloven feet into the swill trough. Note how these birds of prey gathered at the convention, interspersed among the citizens, so full of zeal for the public weal that they can afford to spend their time and money to the neglect of their private affairs. There is a disagreeable suspicion that a project to create more trouble for the miner was a-foot, and that the anti-debris clique was there to saddle the blame of flood and disaster upon the unfortunate hydraulic men. The little game fell through, fortunately, owing to an opposition which started an under-current strong enough to upset the plans of the conspirators, and pin the convention down to the work it had in hand. As a moral support the gathering was quite a success, and it is possible some good thing may yet result from it.

Rumble Rounded Up at Last.

San Francisco is to be congratulated upon getting together a jury which for once has done the honest thing by citizens and taxpayers. We refer to the body which convinced George W. Rumble, the brazen rascal, that there are still some men left in San Francisco to put their foot down upon fraudulent operations like those engaged in by Rumble, the sharper. But then, this was in a United States court, where the better class of jurors sit, and where the bench brooks no interference with the rigid administration of Justice. In the State courts, Rumble might have benefited from the arguments of counsel retained to demonstrate that facts as plain as the nose on one's face were fallacies. The daily press, as usual, is now full of censure for the man who managed to corral over $200,000 by a swindle which was patent to every business man in the city. Not that they also were aware of the real import of the Rumble game, which they evidently did not feel justified in interrupting. In one case, where an effort was made at exposing the rascality, it died an early death upon an attack on the probity of the State Mineralogist, the doubt cast upon the probity of an upright official carrying the weight desired by the culprit Rumble, who tried by the slander to offset the charges of theft laid at his own door, charges which are now proven. It would have been an easy matter for either one or the other of the big dailies to have squelched the Rumble scheme in its initial stages. Mines of the value claimed for the Amo and Old Glory are so rare in any part of the world, and the interest paid was so large, that the natural query would suggest itself as to where and how a bucket shop keeper could get hold of a bonanza of the kind, that suspicion would naturally fall upon the man and his proposition. The experts of the State Mining Bureau would have been at the service of a paper asking an investigation, and their report would have soon enlightened the investing public upon the dangerous character of the scheme. It seems strange that such an individual as Rumble could manage to shield himself against the power of the law so long as he has, and manage even to gain the ear of the Chief Executive of the State himself. Now that the rascal is in a fair way to reach San Quentin, if the magic of gold fails for once in the interest of a thief, there may be a chance to unravel a mystery which has puzzled mining people in the State who have watched the career of this swindler for months past, including the police authorities. Whitaker Wright got seven years penal servitude in an English court for a criminal offense less in every way than that of which Rumble has been convicted, which shows the inefficacy of the law in this country to deal with such cases. Wright blew his brains out to avoid the disgrace. Rumble picks up a paltry $10,000, a small fraction of the bank account now to his credit, moneys obtained from credulous victims, and is free to walk the streets and leave the country should any danger arise of his present conviction holding good.

Another Local Financial Coup.

An exchange calls attention to the fact that the holders of Vigorit Powder have so far not benefited by exchanging their stock for that of the E. I. du Pont de Nemours Co.: "For each share of Vigorit, $2.73 in preferred and $4.67 in common stock in par value of the du Pont Co. was received; a holder of 300 shares of Vigorit received 8 shares and 20.02 per cent of one share preferred stock and 13 shares and 99.98 per cent of one share common. As a matter of fact, the fractions were a source of considerable trouble; if they were sold, almost any price had to be taken, and if sufficient was purchased to make a share, an extra price had to be paid. At the present bid price of the E. I. du Pont de Nemours Powder Company, $80 bid for preferred and $35 for common, $1145.46 could be obtained for the stock received, while for 300 shares of Vigorit at $4.50, the bid price, $1,350 could be realized, or $204.54 more. The E. I. du Pont de Nemours Powder Company is not listed, and as far as can be learned, issues no statements showing the results of its business."

If the mines had anything to do with the Comstock Market, prices would be higher and stocks would be in demand. For the time being, they do not cut any factor in this direction, as the daily quotations show.

Local securities are dull, even for this time of the year, and the wonder is how brokers dependent upon commissions for a livelihood manage to make ends meet.

RED LION BANQUETS.

The handsome dining-room and sumptuous service of The Red Lion Company have been recognized as offering such advantages for private or public banquets that the company has been fairly overrun with requests for the exclusive use of its restaurant for these purposes during the evenings. To meet this demand it has been decided, during the months of May, June and July, to open The Red Lion to the public for luncheon only, and to reserve same in the evenings for the exclusive use of private or public banquets and dinners. The place is already well established as the most popular of the first-class downtown grills for lunch parties, but it is as a banqueting room that it excels. Nothing in this city can surpass for beauty and effect the Red Lion tables and appointments when prepared for a banquet.

Amongst the many affairs of this kind for which it has recently been engaged, we note the Yale dinner, which is scheduled for this Saturday evening at The Red Lion, and of which we hope to give an account in our next issue.

The only and old reliable Swain's Bakery, of 213 Sutter street, is now doing business at 209 Post street. It is now developing that hard money is capable of carrying infection. It has been shown that diphtheria has developed in a child after an hour had elapsed since handling infected money. It follows that money is really entitled to the appellation given it for centuries. It is filthy in more senses than one.

TOWN CRIER

A doctor with a German name has proposed that the cows in the dairies which supply our city with milk should be washed and curry-combed. A new union will thereupon come into being, delighting in the appellation of "Cow-Combers." The Hog-polishers' Association has passed resolutions to the effect that the pumice stone supplied by their employers will no longer be used by the union, the said union requiring in future half a union-made brick, stamped with the union label. A strike has been ordered by a section of the Hog-polishers' Union operating in the Potrero, the bristles of some of the animals having been found too obstinate for treatment. The bristles have been forwarded to the Biological Department of the State University, and it is understood that an illustrated page will appear in the Sunday Examiner on "The Force of Environment: or, How the Bristles of an Alliance Hog Refused to Yield to Union Treatment." A member of the Goat-riders' Union has been found to undertake the organization of the Cow-combers.

Discontented bipeds that we are, here is one of our number, an alleged man, too, mind you, who has brought suit for divorce against his wife on the ground of cruelty, supporting his charge by the statement that she refuses to talk. There are many, many men who would gladly marry were they assured of the future silence of their wives, and here is one who is actually throwing away the good gifts of Providence in this reckless fashion. I can imagine that the angels at his wedding endowed him with this sign of divine favor in consideration of his virtuous youth, and Cupid so bubbled with joy that he had to be taken off by Juno and have his nose wiped. It is true, also, he says, that his wife removed all the furniture from the room which he occupied. But why does a man with a silent wife need furniture? "Build me a lodge in some vast wilderness," sighs the poet, and here an ungrateful wretch had all the properties of the lodge, absence of furniture and a wife, who would not talk. Yet he is dissatisfied. Now, who would envy the Almighty his task?

President Wheeler says: "Effective living is largely a matter of will." This is a comfort. Henceforward let the illuminati eschew the labor which swells the muscles and provides more or less of the meat that perishes. Avaunt, work and fruitless toil. Summer is here, and the advice of the President should be taken, else why do we pay him? Let us sit under a tree and smoke the cigarette, just as the President does; let us speak the speech that is foolish, just as the President does, but above all, let us will effectively. Effectively, ah, there's the rub. That word, like faith, is a regular concertina—it will stand any amount of pulling, though as far as living without work goes, a leg is a much better thing to pull. Who said that the President knows that? Perish the thought; lady patronesses have no legs. The President lives by his will, and who can deny that he lives effectively?

A night clerk in a San Francisco hotel, who committed burglary, is going to be punished by imprisonment. This, by the way, is not prophesy; it is merely a pious wish. It serves the beggar right. Why on earth any San Francisco night clerk should seek to make money by burglary when he could do it so much more cheaply and effectively by blackmail, is incomprehensible.

The Board of Supervisors is getting on. It has actually agreed that a certain sum of money shall be voted to put the schools in repair. This is a bold step and reflects great credit upon the originality and audacity of conception of our city fathers. Why should schools be put in repair anyhow? It might be a good thing to leave them as they are, so that the children may be continually reminded of the beauty of a popular administration. Besides, the attendance upon the funerals of fellow scholars who have succumbed owing to the activity of the agile microbe which is brought into being by the defective plumbing of the schools tends to inculcate a constant remembrance of the imminence of death. Subscriptions for flowers on these occasions also teaches unselfishness. The ramshackle schools, therefore, serve a moral purpose, which, it is to be feared, their repair will destroy, in favor of profits for contractors. It is a sordid age.

Charles H. Spear, President of the Harbor Commission, is going East. There is somewhat of a relief in the very thought. But what about those poor Eastern people whom he is going to make glad with the buxom presence of him? This is what he says: "Correspondence with the Eastern officials is not entirely satisfactory. I want to look at the inner workings of the bigger ports on the Atlantic seaboard." So Mr. Spear wants to see the wheels go round. There is an ominous sound about this declaration which would make one think that our enterprising President of the Harbor Commission fancies that he has not yet exhausted the possibilities of local graft. But what about those poor confiding Easterners whose correspondence is so unsatisfactory? When once Charlie Spear gets into those inner workings I should like to see them get him out again. Before he gets home the Eastern ports will have lost most of their portable property.

It is a commentary upon us that the Graduate Association of the San Francisco State Normal School should be obliged to raise a fund to advance to young women who are unable to complete their course for lack of funds. The schools need good teachers, and many of the soundest and best are prevented by poverty from completing their training. It is proposed to advance from three hundred to five hundred dollars to needy young women in order that they may finish their course. This is all very well as far as it goes; but the position of a young woman who starts upon her work and is obliged to repay a loan of five hundred dollars is by no means enviable. It is not encouraging to think that more money is stolen by city officials in San Francisco in the course of a year than would pay the expenses of all the students at the State Normal School five times over.

San Rafael is still in the throes of the mosquito pest. Even the scandal which floats on the balmy night air from the verandas of the prettiest and wick-edest little town on the Coast are not sufficient to kill out the tiresome little insects. The children are to be called into requisition and are to perform feats of horsemanship for the purpose of driving away the annoyance. How should tots on horseback accomplish that which has so far been undone? They will show their chubby legs for filthy lucre, the said lucre to be expended upon the petroleum which provides Rockefeller with his Sunday-school soul.

Samuel M. Shortridge and Rabbi Voorsanger

Two of the local litterati are at it hammer and tongs on the question of the "Kishinev Massacres" and the "Russo-Japanese War," and the flow of genius and eloquence is apparently unquenchable.

Rabbi Voorsanger takes the gifted follower of Blackstone to task for certain rhetorical efforts in behalf of the "Russian Red Cross Society." It will be remembered that Shortridge some time previously officiated as an orator at a meeting of certain citizens to protest against the persecution and incidentally the massacre of the Jews at Kishinev. The trouble seems to be that the good old Rabbi is unable to differentiate between the Government of Russia and the mob at Kishinev.

If memory serves me right, the speech made by Shortridge at the "Kishinev" meeting was notable for its conservatism, and we note some of the remarks made by other speakers are attributed to Shortridge by the Rabbi. It is a pity that partisanship should hedge the bright mind of any man, and that in the enthusiasm of oratory some are blind to the qualities that should endear them both to the community. Shortridge's voice was lifted against the acts of the irresponsible Russian mob, but he prefaced his speech with a very certain and unqualified warning against accepting the murderous assaults as the acts of the Russian nation or the Russian officials. It was an appeal that should be remembered, and especially so because it was temperate in tenor. The Russian Government has carried on a very rigid investigation in the affair, and as a result the miscreants who attacked the defenseless population of Kishinev have been punished as severely as the unusually severe laws of Russia permit.

Mr. Shortridge, it seems, is an unwilling participant in the controversy, and has been thrown on the defensive—in a polemical discussion.

Regarding the stand taken by Mr. Shortridge at the meeting of the "Russian Red Cross" Society, no one can honestly attack the position he has taken. He is entitled to his belief, and while it so happens that it does not agree with ours, we will grant him the right of expressing his opinion privately and publicly.

The stand we take, which is that taken by but few, is that it is not good business for us to sympathize with the Russian. There is nothing in the twaddle of a big nation bulldozing a smaller one; nothing in the idiotic cry of the yellow peril. The contestants are both Asiatic. But our opinion is another story, and we have no ambition to appear as an intervenor in the oratorical pyrotechnics.

The trouble with Shortridge is that his heart is in the right place, and that it is always open. The door may be knocked at by Jew or Russian, and the gifted Sam knows no creed in charity. He seems to occupy the same position on this question as the late James G. Blaine. The position is one that is more or less sentimental, and I must confess that I can see nothing inconsistent in the two speeches made by the San Francisco Demosthenes.

The following is in part a speech made by Blaine at the time he was Senator and was delivered to the "First Maine Cavalry" in Augusta:

"But there was one trouble, I think. They didn't know how Russia would view it; and so in one of these beautiful towns on the north side of the lake of Geneva a secret envoy from the Emperor Napoleon met Gortschakoff and had an interview with him, and Gortschakoff told him that if England or France laid the weight of a hand upon the interests of the United States, Russia would actively intervene on the side of the Union; and just after that conference (I know I never shall forget it to the last day I live) there appeared very quietly in the Potomac River just below Washington, steaming right along between Washington and Alexandria, five enormous Russian ships of war. Colonel Hamlin tells me there were eight in all the fleet.

"I am only speaking of what I saw. There were five of them there, and I tell you we were glad to see them. They were the most civil and polite gentlemen you ever saw in your life. But it was just a banner hung on the outer walls—a little intimation to Louis Napoleon and Palmerston that if they attempted to intervene here they had a very heavy job on their hands.

"Now that, I say, without any sentimentality between nations—that, I say, entitles Russia and all her citizens and subjects, monarchs and officers to the everlasting gratitude of every American as long as both nations survive.

"I am speaking wholly to private citizens. I do not know, being a Senator of the United States, whether I should speak of international matters with very great freedom. Still, this is free talk, and I am not ashamed to say and to repeat that in whatever contest Russia finds herself engaged, by whatever danger she feels herself menaced, the active sympathies of the people and the Government of the United States will go with her to the end." (Great applause.)

The Man With the Dough

With Apologies to the author of "The Man with the Hoe."

Bowed by the weight of infamy he leans
 Upon his tub, and gazes at his gold,
 The emptiness of folly in his face,
 And on his back the brand of good men's hate.
 Who made him dead to decency and truth—
 A thing that feels not, and can never think,
 Stupid and dull, own brother to the ass?
 Who gave his face its vacuous, leering grin?
 Whose was the hand that shaped those trembling lips,
 Slobbering with weakness, tremulous with vice?
 Whose breath blew out his light, and made a beast?

Is this the thing that dare aspire and hope
 To place his name where honest men have writ?
 To make decrees and work his bestial will—
 To sell his land to anarchy and strife?
 To play the fool with our great destiny?
 And is this gold the instrument he wields?—
 The filthy gold oozing in yellow drops
 The color of the sheet that shouts his name,
 The color of the blood in his own poisoned veins,
 The gold his father gathered by his toil,
 The gold his mother spends in deeds of love,
 The gold that in his vicious hand becomes
 A tool of treason and a villain's aid.

What gulfs between him and great Jefferson!
 Slave of destroying vices, what to him
 Are Honor and the calls of Chivalry?
 What the integrity which strong men prize,
 The blush of modesty, the strength of truth?
 The barrel that he hugs is all his God,—
 He knows no music but the jingling coins,
 And with such music he has charmed the minds
 Of fawning things, prostrating their cheap souls
 In mute obedience to his filthiness.

O citizens and Masters of the State,
 How will your reason reckon with this man?
 How answer his brute question when he seeks
 To brand his infamy upon this land?
 How will it be with all his treasure then,
 When honest men shall thrust him into Hell
 And let him shrivel through the centuries?

SOCIETY

The rustle of the grasses
Whispers to the silent sky;
So I care not how time passes,
If it only pass me by.
I have thrown the whole thing over
And have yet the fullest gain,
In the freedom of a rover
And the grasses' hushed refrain.

For a busy rabbit's creeping
To his supper on the hill,
And a hidden linnet's cheeping
To the bubbling of the rill.
So I care not how time passes,
If it only pass me by,
In the rustle of the grasses
And the silence of the sky.

Dear Bessie: Engagement announcements, luncheons and card parties have served to enliven us this week, and of each there have been quite a number. We have been waiting and watching for the news of Gertrude Dutton's engagement to Josh Howell, which every one knew was sure to come, and now it has been formally announced, which means another big wedding before long. The announcement of Stella McCalla's engagement to William Chapin of Sacramento was made at a tea given last Monday at the Admiral's home at Mare Island. All the Yard was there, of course, with several from the city, and it gives us promise of a brilliant wedding to come off there early in August, for the McCallas always give such handsome and delightful entertainments. One good thing about it is the certainty of keeping Stella in California, as the other McCalla girls, having married in the service, we can only be sure of them just as long as they are in sight. And only think of Charlie Ellinwood and Miss Arnold getting married unknown to any one; just walked off quietly to a Justice of the Peace and had the knot tied last week, and are now receiving the felicitations of their friends at their simple way of doing things. They have gone, I believe, to Stanislaus County, where they will enjoy the pleasures of ranch life, for a time, at least, if not en permanence.

I forgot to tell you last week of the Bissinger-Ehrman wedding, which came off at noon on Wednesday at the Bissinger residence on Pacific Avenue, Rabbi Voorsanger officiating in a bower of pink hawthorne and American beauty roses. The pretty little bride, Elizabeth Bissinger, who was given away by her grandfather, Moses Greenbaum, wore a lovely gown of white satin trimmed with Valenciennes lace, tulle veil, and carried orange blossoms. Her sister Emma, who was her sole attendant, was in white chiffon over green silk, and Alfred Ehrman was best man to his brother Alexis. It was a family gathering purely, and at the dejeuner which followed the ceremony, but later there was a large reception.

The first announced June wedding will be that of Genevieve Huntsman and Harry Williar at the home of Mrs. Huntsman on the 8th; the cards came out this week, and I must not forget to tell you that Elsie Marsh's engagement to Mason Moran was announced at the tea Mrs. Wheeler gave for the Spinners' Club on Tuesday.

The fascination of bridge seems to grow and grow.

I have heard it likened to hitting the pipe—the first game or smoke indulged in, the devotee or the victim is lost, and there is nothing left but to keep on. Of a truth, one hears of little else being played these days. Both Nellie Oxnard and Gertrude Van Wycke had their bridge clubs meet at their houses last Thursday.

Mrs. Burke Holladay, who so seldom appears in the list of hostesses, gave a very pretty luncheon last Friday in compliment to her sister-in-law, Mrs. Messer, who has been here on a visit to her mother from her English home for some time past, the guests being a happy combination of old and young. Among them was a charming lady from New York, a Mrs. Chadwick, who is staying with the Phelans. Florence Bailey gave a luncheon on Tuesday—she will stay in town all summer. Mabel Toy's luncheon was one of the events of Wednesday, and Mrs. Toy had a luncheon yesterday. Alice Sprague was a tea hostess on Friday, and on Tuesday a lot of the girls went over to Sausalito to one given by Cornelia Campbell for Carrie Merry, who is to spend the whole of next month with Anne Field; and Mrs. George Boardman, who has gone to do the St. Louis Fair, gave a farewell family dinner, the evening before she left, for her sons, Sam, Chauncey and Danforth, and their wives, and this sums up most of the recent gatherings. To-day the Gorrills give a tea in Oakland which promises to be quite an affair, and for next Saturday I am looking forward to the pony show at San Rafael, which Dick says is to be "great fun." It will be held at the Bates place near the Hotel Rafael, and after the parade is over, there will be no end of other pleasures—tea, and so forth. Mollie came in for a lot of fun during her recent visit to Mare Island, taking in many of the parties given for other visitors, who were there at the same time, and particularly pretty, she said, was the card party of Mrs. Graham's, where they played seven-handed euchre.

Blessings brighten, etc., and hence Mrs. Peter is being muchly sought after as her departure for the East draws nigh. Mrs. Sheils' luncheon at the St. Francis was expressly for her, and was a pretty affair, and I hear that Mrs. Eleanor Martin, who has been visiting in San Diego and Los Angeles, will not let her daughter-in-law go without an extra large dinner as a bon voyage and happy return, which, by the bye, is said to be an assured fact, before the close of the year.

The Fields have taken one of the Tallant apartments on Washington street, and are very pleasantly located therein; Helen Wagner has been up at San Rafael with the J. J. Moores for a little visit, and will be with her sister most of the summer at her Menlo Park home. The Duttons are going to Yosemite next month, and will have Maylite Pease with them, who has just returned from her visit East, where she has been for a long time; the Gallatins and Lita were in New York early this week, having done the St. Louis Exposition very thoroughly. Louise Breeze and Ethel Lincoln have gone on a visit to the Bensons at Fort Jefferson, with whom they will take in the wonders of the St. Louis show. Susie Bixby had Louise Cooper of Santa Barbara with her this week; she gave her a lovely card party the other day. The Mills-Read party, who are early spring guests, have gone back East, but soon will come summer visitors, and always among the earliest is Mrs. Richardson Clover, who dearly loves her pretty home in Napa Valley, and will, as usual, be here ere long with her daughters to enjoy it. Louise Redington is home again from her trip to Europe, and we are glad to have her back.

Georgie Spieker leaves in about two weeks for the Yellowstone region, and will be away the whole of June; Anita Bertheau has gone East for the summer; the Fred McNears have had their auto down at Del Monte enjoying their spins most thoroughly, I hear. Mrs. Sonntag and Edith will soon be back from the East, and are to spend the summer at the Hotel Rafael, and there, too, Everett Bee has decided to put in the next few weeks.

When a man joins a labor union, generally speaking, he surrenders his individuality and becomes a mere cog in a wheel. Moreover, he is denied the right to consult, much less consider, his own best interests in those concerns of life which have all to do with remuneration for the employment of his skill and brain and brawn. He is a slave to the caprice of men who live on the fruits of knavery. The wonder is that otherwise strong and manly characters in the world of labor should be so weak and so lacking in self-reliance in matters of such vital importance to them as to fail in the exercise of their sovereign right to seek and accept employment on the basis of personal negotiation. When a man recognizes an authority higher than himself to fix his own worth, he is a vassal of that authority, and in labor unionism that authority is a merciless tyrant for his own personal advantage.

San Francisco has long been famous for its array of bright young men in the advertising line. The Emil Held Company, General Advertisers and Publishers, who make a specialty of designing and printing, stand at the head of the profession. It is necessary as a factor in success in the line of advertising to understand the medium to reach the public best. The Emil Held Company has made this the study of years, and the general satisfaction expressed by their patrons in the results obtained is the best evidence of their ability. It is a pleasure to deal with them, as they do not "bear" every publication that is mentioned. They have the merits of all the San Francisco and Coast papers reduced to a science, and an infallible one at that.

THE LOOKER-ON

That eminent statesman, Supervisor Oscar Hocks, believes in paying election bets, and in aiding during his days of eminence, those who assisted in thrusting prominence upon him. Mr. Hocks, who sells liquor when not otherwise engaged, has introduced in the Board of Supervisors an ordinance providing that saloon keepers refused a liquor license by the Board of Police Commissioners shall have the right to appeal to the Board of Supervisors, and that if in the judgment of the latter body "the said license should be issued, they shall authorize the Tax Collector to issue said license." Mr. Hocks is acting in behalf of the Associated Retail Liquor Dealers who feel they have had cause to complain against the Police Commissioners, and some of whom also object to paying fees to attorneys to represent them whenever it is necessary to go to the Hall of Justice. So Hocks has evolved the scheme to make the Board of Supervisors a sort of appellate court, where the rejected applications for liquor licenses will be reviewed. The plan is Napoleonic in its possibilities for acquiring political support from the liquor dealers. The Supervisors now devote considerable attention to the propagation of prize fights, and it needs only to make them the arbiters of the fate of saloon keepers to secure the support of the red light district forever.

Hocks' proposed ordinance has one fatal defect. It is clearly in excess of the powers of the Supervisors, because it is amendatory of the charter. That document grants the Supervisors certain powers, all of which, however, are "subject to the provisions, limitations and restrictions in this charter contained." One of these restrictions is the provision giving to the Police Commissioners exclusive authority to issue liquor licenses. We do not presume that the people are much interested in the source from which the liquor licenses emanate, but it might be just as well to leave the power where the law places it—with the Police Commissioners—for it is certainly easier to keep track of four Commissioners than of eighteen Supervisors.

The case of George D. Collins has attracted considerable attention, not only because of the charges of unprofessional conduct made against him, and of his counter-charges against Judge Kerrigan, but also on account of the attitude assumed in the matter by the Bar Association. The grievance committee of the association has recommended that proceedings in disbarment be instituted against Collins, and this will be done. The trial before the Supreme Court will prove of unusual interest. Collins has shown himself to be a man of many resources, and with his back against the wall, he will make a very desperate fight. He may be guilty of all that is charged against him, but that does not convince an unprejudiced observer that some members of the Bar Association were not animated somewhat by personal motives when it voted to attack him in the courts. His main offending, it appears, was his assault upon Judge Kerrigan. I believe in this he was guilty of a grievous wrong and an outrageous act, but it was all within his legal rights, and made in the manner provided by the law; therefore, I think he should not be disbarred for thus offending the proprietors. Judge Kerrigan is an upright Judge, but there are others on the bench to-day in this city whose ermine is dyed deep with the slime of corruption. The lawyers of the Bar Association know this better than most men. Why don't they expose and attack the crooked Judges? Is it not common talk that certain lawyers can get anything they want from certain Judges? That if a case is assigned to a certain court, only certain lawyers can win a trial there held? Is it not known that certain attorneys, with the aid of certain Judges, have managed by hook and by crook to keep law breakers out of jail, despite the efforts of the police authorities to enforce the law? Is the Bar Association afraid of the Judges? Is it a commentary on the condition of the bar in this city that not five per cent of the 3,000 attorneys of San Francisco are members of the Bar Association? It looks to a disinterested observer as if the Bar Association were "four flushing" in the Collins case. If it is for reform, there is plenty of work for the Association; but nothing is to be gained by single efforts. What about the Nagles and the Salomons, and the Joneses, and others who have been engaged in what laymen might be tempted to call the despoilation of estates? Has the Bar Association no eye for these offenders? Let the grievance committee buckle on its armor and go forth upon a crusade.

Over at Berkeley there is a College of Commerce, in which the students are instructed in the fundamental principles of business conducted in accordance with modern methods. Down at Palo Alto is an opposition emporium of commercial knowledge, where the boys are given tips on the easiest way of skinning the Berkeley lads on 'change, after they have done the "crossing the threshold" act and left college. Quite in line with the ideas of business education, the bankers held a State convention last week, at which many interesting papers were read. Lovell White, for instance, told some things about mortgages, and said, incidentally, that all modern business is based on credit. In brief, credit is the life of trade. Adam Smith and other economists used to think that competition was the life of trade, but now we learn from universities and bankers that credit is the thing. That, doubtless, explains the actions of the Berkeley and Stanford seniors in establishing a long line of credit when they set about contracting bills for their commencement exercises. The tradesmen, not having had the benefits of university training, believed in credit only to a limited extent. Some of them were so rude that they sued the Berkeley boys, and the uncultured process servers captured several seniors at a picnic in the hills, and held them prisoners until they gathered a few simoleons from their friends and gave them to the men with the bills as evidences of good faith. The Palo Alto seniors have not been sued or captured up to date, but the bills for the supper at their commencement ball have not been paid, and their class plate of glittering brass, planted in the quadrangle, has its glory dimmed by a chattel mortgage. All of which leads me to the belief that it might be well for the professors at the Colleges of Commerce at the two universities to deliver a series of lectures on "Bills and their Payment."

A new church, about to be opened in the Western Addition, advertises as one of its many attractions a flea-proof carpet of cork which will be spread over the floor for the greater comfort of the worshipers. The pastor of this church should meet with the success which his thoughtfulness deserves. In endeavoring to provide for the physical comfort of his congregation he displays a true Christian spirit. He, of all the many ministers, has solved the problem of why men do not go to church. The California flea he recognizes as an agent of the devil, whose purpose on earth is to disturb the minds of those who are intent upon devotion, and to cause them such physical discomfort that they cannot raise themselves to that state of mental exaltation so necessary for contemplation of the beatitudes. Other pastors should follow his lead.

Scientists now tell us that germs of disease lodge in our shoes, and are thus carried into happy homes, where they are turned loose to create havoc and dismay. The surest safeguard is to have the shoes cleaned with some antiseptic preparation. Particular attention should be given the inside of the shoe, say the men of learning. The shoes should be thoroughly cleaned inside and out. The signs in front of barber shops, "Shoes Cleaned Inside," should no longer create levity. If you would be free from germs, have your shoes polished on the inside. It is the very latest fad.

The Park Commissioners are entitled to the thanks of the community for ordering the removal of the peddlers and sure-thing men from the ocean beach. Their presence on the strand below the Cliff House has constituted a public nuisance for years. People go to the beach to indulge in ozone and to enjoy the wondrous beauties of the ocean; not to run the gamut of peanut butchers, tamale vendors and hawkers of pink lemonade; nor to be assailed by the sure-thing man with the roulette wheel, or the more obnoxious trickster with the pegs and the iron rings. The wrapping papers, tin cans, old bottles, ripped socks, cinders, broken boxes and barrels thrown out by these peddlers make the beach look like a garbage dump. The Park Commissioners should have the offal removed and the sands scraped over. Mounted policemen should be required to patrol the beach on Saturdays and Sundays, and on holidays, to preserve the sands from desecration by the ungodly.

William Lorraine has sued Miss du Clam for $2000 damages, because in a moment of enthusiasm, induced by the knowledge that this is a leap year, the fair one grabbed him in a loving embrace, and hugged Willie so tight that she cracked one of his ribs. If this thing keeps on, remedial and protective measures must be enacted to protect our young men from athletic young women. Else, the new generation will be minus a few floating ribs.

In August, the National Guard will camp with the regulars, under the command of Major-General McArthur. Uncle Sam will pay the militiamen the same amount paid regulars during the fortnight's encampment, and will feed, arm and instruct the soldiers of the State. The National Guard officers will also receive the pay of their rank, while in the field. But, sad to relate, Uncle Sam draws the line at our army of epauletted Generals. He will have none of them. He figures it will cost him some $2000 to support Major-General Dickinson and his staff, and the other Generals and their staffs, for the two weeks. So the Generals, perforce, must stay home. Like so many Othellos, their occupation will be gone. The old gentleman at Washington thinks he has about all he can stagger under with General Funston, General Wood, and a few others that were made to order, and he won't stand for the warrior from Saualito.

The local School Board has directed the teachers to examine the pupils every morning for traces of disease, and to make reports upon blank forms of anything that looks irregular. This will be, hereafter, the order of exercises in the school rooms:

First Exercise—Open mouths! Stick out tongues!

Second Exercise—Open mouths! Lay tongues—flat! Tintillate—the tonsils!

Third Exercise—Close mouths! Inhale! Exhale! Wiggle—the ears! Swallow slowly, moving Adam's apple gracefully up and down along an imaginary line drawn from a point equi-distant between the posterior parts of the jaw bones to a spot upon the palpitating point of the solar plexus!

And the school teachers get only $60 per for all that! It's worth it.

The American Federation of Musicians has refused to permit the union musicians of San Francisco to participate with army bands in August next at the parade of the Knights Templar. The American Federation is evidently composed of intelligent men. They know that San Francisco wants to entertain the Knights Templar in a befitting manner, and that poor music is most distressing; also, they know that the army bands play good music. Therefore, they have ordered the local musicians to keep away from the parade. The managing committee of the Templars' conclave should send the Federation a vote of thanks.

PLEASURE'S WAND

A TRUSTY TIP ON THINGS THEATRICAL.

TIVOLI—"A Runaway Girl"—Scenically beautiful, well staged, good chorus.

ALCAZAR—"A Possible Case," funny situations in brilliant comedy, well put on.

GRAND—Melbourne MacDowell in Fedora—A very good performance of the Sardou play.

COLUMBIA—Richard Mansfield in repertoire—nuf eed.

ORPHEUM—Crisp vaudeville. A good show.

CENTRAL—"A Great Temptation," an American drama.

Purposely I have refrained from an extended review of "Ivan." The play strikes me as tedious, and I have no desire to inflict my impression on the public. I emerged from the theatre with a distinct feeling of a cold in the head. This may have been due to my seat in the theatre or the "skis" and "skoffs" of the stage. I do not like gloom. On the score of scenic arrangement the play is a dream. While the material has the appearance of being somewhat flimsy, that is easily forgot in the sombre magnificence of the perfect Russo-Byzantine ornamentation and coloring.

Mr. Mansfield has left his impress on the dramatic history of the century, and to many it is to date sensations from the time of seeing him in one of his great plays. He is a wonderfully fine actor, and it seems as easy a task for him to portray youth as old age, virility as decrepitude. He is a scholar, a business man and an artist. It was the combination of these qualities that made the Grand Monarchs, Bonaparte and Frederic the Great, the makers of history they were. Mansfield, as they, would have been a success in any line. Fate cast him among the mummies, and as a mummy he stands pre-eminent. He is a maker of history too—on the stage. Valeté ac plaudite.

Inadvertently I said that it would be wise to eliminate the ad. curtain during the Mansfield engagement. There is no advertising curtain at the Columbia. I am filled with unquenchable remorse in this matter, because next to being criminal abettor for an ad. curtain, I can conceive of nothing worse than being accused of owning such an atrocity. I was fresh from a round of all the play houses, and the cauchemar was in my thoughts predominant.

"A Possible Case" is a laughable skit at the Alcazar for this week. There is a laughable situation caused by the marriage of one woman to three men, and the matter is finally adjusted to the satisfaction of all concerned. There is a great deal of mirth in the play, and it is well staged. The cleverest work is done by Mr. George Osbourne as Mendoza, the villainous Mexican. He is simply immense in this act, succeeding in subduing his voice and action to that of a rather "young" middle-aged villain. His mannerisms are well thought, and to tell you the truth, I did not think he had it in him. Adele Block is a very lovely Violet Mendoza, the woman of many husbands, and Frances Starr makes a most winsome Gladys.

Madame Tojetti again demonstrated her great ability as an impresario in an invitational affair at the California Club last week. She favored the audience with an exhaustive treatise on the life and the music of Hugo Wolf. This was followed by a varied programme inclusive of the songs of Scheffel, Kerner, Heysse, Morike, Eichendoeff, and others. Madame Emilia Tojetti was assisted by Fred Maurer, Jr. In him she found a very sympathetic accompanist, and as this was the first production of the music and songs of the gifted Wolf in San Francisco, the California Club is to be congratulated on having the services of so clever a woman.

"The Runaway Girl" is still running—at the Tivoli.

Melbourne MacDowell and Miss Ethel Fuller are making a big success at the Grand in "Fedora."

"A Great Temptation" at the Central should tempt large audiences, as it is a scenic and artistic success.

The Orpheum has a good bill this week. "Burke, Larue and their Inky Boys" are phenomenally good. Marcel's Living Art Studios are an improvement on the first week, and the rest of the company is an excellent one.

Hooray! Hooray! Charles W. Strine has returned from the Eastern centers, and he is to bring out a new lot of faces for the Tivoli stage. For the first time in many months we will see a pretty face and a shapely leg. Once this becomes known to the public at large it will be almost an impossibility to prevent a riot at the box office. The news is scarcely believable. There are many good things in store. Among these may be mentioned "Robin Hood," "Tor-eador," "The Emerald Isle," "The Wild Rose," "The Chinese Honeymoon," "Dolly Varden," "The Messenger Boy," "Babette," "San Toy," "Three Little Maids," "The Gaiety Girl," "My Lady Mollie," and a host of other good things.

Lillian Sefton, Floye Redledge, Kate Condon, Alfred McGahan and Melville Ellis are the new names that will be seen on the programme.

Alfons, the European equilibrist, will make his first appearance at the Chutes this coming week in the act that has won him fame all over the world, and Bert Bence and Joe Allen, presenting a highly amusing act entitled "An Original Idea." Mr. and Mrs. Ben Hunn, one of the most renowned duos of colored comedians before the public, will also be new. The two Fantas, acrobatic comedy delineators of child life, with their trained pig, "Mike," will vary their act, and George and Laura Lewis, the two "Rubes," Mildred Manning, the popular contralto, in a new illustrated song, the views for which show scenes of San Francisco life, and the animatoscope, showing the latest novelties in moving pictures, will complete a capital programme. The amateurs will appear on Thursday night. The Zoo is in receipt of many rare and interesting animals, and twenty new monkeys have just been added to the happy family in the Darwinian Temple.

Jules Ferrar, Dorothy Kendal and Thornton Cole, three very clever farceurs, will make their first appearance in this city at the Orpheum this coming week. Gaston and Stone, known as "The Jolly Jackies," will also be new here. Andrew and William Powers, the original Alphonse and Gaston A-wheel, promise a laughing novelty in their trick bicycle act.

Charles Burke, Grace La Rue and their "Inky" boys, will introduce new specialties in "The Silver Moon." The new reproductions in bas relief and paintings in Marcel's Living Art Studios will include the Gleaners, Virginius, the Abduction, Oedipus, Apollo Charming the Shepherds, the Sailor's Return, and For the Flag. The delightful Colby family of musicians will vary their musical entertainment; Al Lawrence will present an entire change of songs, stories and imitations, and Belle Gordon, the World's champion bag puncher of her sex, will complete a varied and interesting programme. There will be a special Matinee on Monday, Decoration Day.

Next Monday matinee (Decoration Day), "The Toy Maker" will be revived for one week. The immense success achieved by this piece at the old Tivoli will not be soon forgotten. Over a year has elapsed since its last production, and its revival should be particularly welcome, especially as the stage and resources of the new Tivoli will permit of a more perfect presentation than it has yet had. At the Monday and Saturday matinees every child in attendance will receive a handsome toy.

Melbourne MacDowell will begin the fifth week of his engagement at the Grand Opera House tomorrow matinee, with a perfect production of "Gismonda." Ethel Fuller will play the role of "Gismonda." There will be a special matinee of "Gismonda" next Monday, Decoration Day. Sunday matinee, June 5th, Mr. MacDowell will begin the sixth and last week of his successful engagement with a splendid presentation of the romantic drama, "A Captain of Navarre." The play is entirely new here, but it created an immense sensation in the East.

Mrs. Leslie Carter commences an engagement at this theatre Monday, June 13th, in David Belasco's play, "Du Barry."

Next week the Central Theatre will present "A Celebrated Case." This famous play is one of the most perfect of standard dramas in unity of plot, wealth of incident, richness of dialogue and intense power of climaxes.

The Loring Club will give one of its delightful soirees at Native Sons' Hall on the evening of Tuesday, May 31st. It is the fourth concert of the twenty-seventh season. The club has engaged for this occasion a professional orchestra of nearly forty pieces, assisted by the club's soloists. One-half of the programme will consist of one of the most dramatic of works, written for male voices. It is called "The Battle of the Huns," by Zollner, a foremost German composer. Mrs. Wallace Wheaton Briggs, soprano, will make her debut with the Loring Club in the only female part, that of "Gottlinde." This requires a soprano of great dramatic range.

The thanks of the whole community are always due to John McLaren, and it is a pleasure to say anything that is to his credit. On the 2d, a banquet is to be given in his honor, and the best of the commercial and professional world of San Francisco has been bidden to pay him respects. The banquet is in the nature of a farewell to Mr. McLaren on his departure to Scotland, where he will visit his old mother. The Board of Park Commissioners has voted Mr. McLaren one thousand dollars for his expenses on this trip. This is a graceful and a just compliment to a painstaking and deserving public official.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs

Penetrating the Interior.

The war in Manchuria is developing tactics that are a radical departure from the old way.

History gives no account of an army covering its advance with heavy and cumbersome field artillery, but that is the way General Kuroki is moving in the direction of the Russian stronghold at Mukden, and apparently with pronounced success. In previous wars the rule was to put the artillery into action as a prelude to the first onslaught, and after the advanced infantry and cavalry forces had obliged battle-line formation, but the Japanese have a way of their own invention, and thus far it has been a very good way. By all the rules of defensive operation the Russians should make their dispute against further advance of the enemy at Mukden a second Gettysburg, but intimations come from St. Petersburg that after slight resistance at that point, General Kuropatkin will retire upon Harbin, which is located at the junction of the Port Arthur branch of the main Siberian railway whose eastern terminus is Vladivostock. This makes the distance from Port Arthur to Harbin about 800 miles, but a good deal more than half of the distance is already actually or strategically under Japanese control. It seem to be Kuropatkin's plan to rely upon his Cossacks to sufficiently harass the Japanese flanks and rear to make their journey to Harbin a long-drawn out and a most wearisome tramp, attended by great loss from skirmishes and disease. Against this hinted-at plan of the Russian commander is the strong point that the Japanese can and would advance along the line of the Port Arthur and Harbin railway, giving them ample transportation facilities for supplies and troop movements; besides, they already have a strong base on the Yalu river from which a movement, or rather from which the main movement against Mukden is being made, and which must necessarily become threatening to Vladivostock as the Japanese advance toward Mukden and Harbin. Viewed strategically at this time the Japanese are in a very much stronger position than the Slavs, barring the danger from Cossack raids on flanks and rear. Still a great battle at Mukden might be fought without materially changing the strategy of either as a whole. It will be remembered that the battle of Gettysburg was so fierce and destructive that the total loss in killed and wounded was considerably over twenty thousand men, and that both armies were so badly crippled that the one could not hinder the movement of the other toward its base. The same thing might be done at Mukden, but of course such a battle would prolong the war, for so long as the combatants can maintain bases of supplies and centers of operations, there would be no occasion to quit—except diplomatically. The changes in the situation the past week are decidedly favorable for a war of several years duration, so far as the armies are concerned.

Port Arthur Holding Out.

The situation on the Port Arthur peninsula is very much like it was at Vicksburg after General Grant had secured all the water and land approaches to the Confederate garrison of over 30,000 men—twice the land force that is defending Port Arthur. The Japanese army practically controls by actual or strategical force all the land approaches to Port Arthur for fully, if not more, than 400 miles inland, besides the navy is master of the water side. General Grant had no fear of serious opposition from the Confederates in Mississippi, Louisiana, or Arkansas, and he was supreme on the Mississippi river. Grant took Vicksburg by "parallels and approaches," mines and occasional charges, meanwhile keeping up a steady mortar fire from the river squadron. The Japanese are using substantially the same tactics at Port Arthur. The fate of Vicksburg was sealed the hour it was invested; so was Port Arthur's fate sealed when Japanese troops landed in its rear.

British Thibetan Policy.

The London Government being assured of the indorsement and support of the subjects of the kingdom and of the empire, and the good will of the civilized world generally, outside of Russia, in her Thibetan undertaking, a vigorous policy has been adopted, which contemplates no halt or compromise until the sovereignty of Great Britain is recognized and peace secured throughout Thibet. It is unfortunate for the Thibetans as well as for the civilized world that England's supremacy will not be fully established and peace secured immediately. It is very certain that Russia is urging the Llama to resist the English to the last and that he has assurances of at least financial aid for war purposes from St. Petersburg. And it is equally certain that organized bands of Tartars are entering Thibet to co-operate with the Llama's army, and that Russian money is paying their bills. It is not supposed that the British will have much difficulty in capturing the principal trade centers and lines of communication, but under Russian influence and by Tartar military aid the Llama will seek the fastness of the mountain country, and may from there prosecute an irregular warfare for years. So long as he can do that, immigration, commerce and capital will not be likely to invade the country to any great extent, but of course the fanatics will in time be driven from their mountain camps by willing assimilation and acquiescence, or by being gathered to their fathers. History records but one notable exception to the rule that Great Britain gets what she goes after in the way of trade, traffic and territory, and that one exception was the American colonies when they repudiated British sovereignty, but in speaking of that event, history makes the point that England was dealing mostly with Englishmen, Irishmen and Scotchmen, by birth or descent, and that she should have been well enough acquainted with her own children and blood relations to avoid bucking against the inevitable. Anyway, map makers may as well prepare cuts to call it "British Thibet."

Panama Fears Trouble.

The authorities of Panama have received the $10,000,000 due them for the canal franchise and for their treachery to their Government, the Republic of the United States of Colombia, but they are in a peck of trouble over it. They fear that so much ready money in sight will so stimulate patriotism that several revolutions may be started to ostensibly give the young republic a better government, but in reality to get hold of the canal purchase money. Still, they think they see safety in the almost certainty of a deadly conflict between the several patriots who are aspiring to chief executive authority—and the handling of the cash; and, too, they rely, as the last resort, to keep themselves nailed down to their job upon United States marines and warships, which it is understood will be forthcoming, but under the guise of "protecting our canal zone." The treasury department's part in the canal transaction is now closed, but the war and navy departments' part will be a continuous performance so long as the United States owns the property, which may not be a great while, as the canal syndicate is now scheming for ownership by legislation which will not contemplate the outlay of a dollar by the syndicate.

INSURANCE

The News Letter was the first publication on the Coast to make known the Atlas-Manchester deal.

The News Letter has cabled to England and is momentarily expecting a reply.

That the coalescence is a fact admits of no doubt; the chronicling of the passing of the Manchester is but the chronicling of the passing of the other companies—the Thuringia, the Lancashire, et al.

There may be others hanging on by their alien eyelids to the American premium income, but they are getting fewer and less each time they have to make a statement.

The amalgamation of the Manchester by the Atlas is but the forerunner of the decadence of other British companies.

Englishmen are proverbially close-fisted. They do not like to lose money, and as soon as the venture fails to pay in the United States, they holler for the cash down.

It is a safe proposition to gamble on that the British companies which are losing money will not be among us much longer. There are companies manufactured in England whose policies are beyond question, who by their probity and capital are making money in the United States, and these companies will stay with us.

On the other hand there are a few companies also manufactured in Great Britain which are losing money. These and such must go. They are like the Manchester and the Thuringia and the Lancashire. All of them are good for their contracts, but not good enough to make a profit; hence they all quit.

An exchange, writing of the passing of the Manchester, says: "The first intimation that the officers of the Manchester Fire in New York City had that a deal between their company and the Atlas had been effected or was pending, was at noon on Saturday, when Mr. Sumner Ballard, insurance editor of the Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin, apprised them of the fact. Later a cable was received from Manchester saying that amalgamation with the Atlas had been provisionally agreed to, and instructing the United States branch to continue business as hitherto—an order easier given than carried out. A cable to the New York office of the Atlas merely announced that a preliminary arrangement for taking over the Manchester Fire had been signed.

"The Atlas Assurance Company has a subscribed capital of £1,200,000 in 24,000 shares of £50 each on which £5 was paid up, making with £24,000 since added from profits £144,000 paid up, or £6 per share. The Manchester Assurance Company's subscribed capital is £2,000,000 in 100,000 shares of £20 each, on which £2 is paid up."

On January 1st, the Manchester reported total assets in England of $1,734,221, and a surplus over all liabilities of $574,575. The company purchased the American Fire of New York a few years ago, and after continuing it for a short time re-insured its business in the Hartford Fire.

George W. Turner has further endeared himself to the respectable element of the fire Underwriting world by resigning the general agency of the Northwestern.

Mr. Turner will not be long without a new company. His business getting ability is too well known for him to be idle. He placed the Northwestern in decent society, and it found itself so much out of place that Mr. Turner threw it out on the street.

At a hotel fire in Delaware a dog ran barking through the house, arousing all the inmates. All safely reached the street, but the dog was badly burned.

A theatrical man in New York claims to have discovered a solution which, when applied to scenery and costumes, makes them fire-proof. A recent test witnessed by members of the fire and building departments proved all that was claimed of it. When subjected to 300 degrees of heat, the material did not burn, but only blackened.

A broker called up a well-known insurance company on April 1st, and giving a fictitious name, asked if the company would take $40,000 on Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. The insurance company was very glad to get the line, and did not realize it was an April fool joke until trying to obtain re-insurance.

Labor unionism in the United States has become an organized conspiracy against the safety of trade, commerce and industry and the rights of non-unionists. If "Government by injunction," or even more forceful measures, are required to crush the conspiracy, let such measures be adopted speedily. There should not be room in this country for such an organization of social and industrial destructionists.

Only he dignifies labor and raises it to his own level of respectability who does so in the mightiness of self-reliance. Labor unionism destroys self-reliance in the individual, reducing him to a mere commodity in the labor market, and obliging him to accept such prices for his services as those of his guild who live by their wits establish for him, and those who live by their wits live like princes by comparison.

"NEW" SANTA CRUZ

A WONDERFUL PAINTING.

"The Return of the Crusaders" is the name of a painting by Torrigha, which is on exhibition at Gumps, and which has attracted considerable and growing attention. It is a wonderful piece of work, and is an example of the best of the modern school. There is a nicety of detail that, in places, reminds one of Meissonier, while the background would please the strictest devotee of what may be called the "broad" in art. It is a large canvas, and depicts the return of General William Embriaco, a palladian of the first crusade. The populace of Genoa gives him welcome. Embriaco was the favorite of Baldwin, he of the mace, and evidently the favorite son of Genoa. The crowd represents tenderest infancy to tottering age, and the treatment is superb. There is a crispy sunlight in the picture and a swing in the composition that is most pleasing to the eye.

It is not stretching the truth to say that "The Return of the Crusaders" is the best piece of art work that has been exhibited in San Francisco in years. It would not be a wild flight of the imagination to conjure the glitter of pageantry and the scent of flowers, the sunshine and the animated faces of the painting, so true is every brush stroke to the life.

The West has been prolific of men and women of note in art, music and literature. Nellie Burrell Scott is the latest addition to the painters who have achieved celebrity in one particular line. She is the only woman painter in the West who has followed the illusive trout in his lair, the bass and the cod, and in fact nearly all the fish of our salt and fresh waters in their haunts, studying their home life and their exhibition moods. She has done with her brush what Thompson Seton has done with his pen and pencil. She is a strong, virile woman, who is not afraid to labor to achieve, and who has the satisfaction of knowing that she excels in her line. She has clambered over the rocks and along the rills and creeks of California until she knows them in their every mood. There is an exhibition of her work that is well worth visiting at Schussler's Gallery on Geary street. Lovers of art and those that are enamored of the rod and line should avail themselves of this opportunity to see a rare collection of fish pictures. These are all notable, and among them is one still life—a rock-cod—that has taken a medal.

Record from Del Monte to Oakland 5 hours and 38 minutes. The only successful tour of the Yosemite made by Major Fulmer of Los Angeles and a party of three.

CUYLER LEE, Agent. 201-203 Larkin Street, S. F.

BY THE AUTOCRANK

The race committee of the Automobile Club of California is centering all its energies on the annual meet to be held in August at Del Monte. At the present time the committee is undecided as to the number of days racing that will be had.

One of the features of the Del Monte meet will be the hill climbing contest to be held on the Government Reservation.

The club has not taken any definite action in regard to the Los Angeles endurance run that was proposed some months ago. The length of time that such a contest would consume has made the committee careful in their actions, inasmuch as they are not desirous of seeing it turn out a failure. Chairman Lowe will leave shortly for the South to interview the members of the Los Angeles clubs, and if they will take part in such an event the contest will come up again for consideration by the local automobilists.

Some of the members have suggested that the club in the meantime hold a hill climbing contest on 19th avenue, but the committee cannot see where a contest at that place would give anything like satisfactory results.

The club should have some sort of programmed events for the months of June and July. If the club does not keep active it will be impossible to hold its membership. A club to be successful must be always leading its members. If the officers are not active the members cannot be expected to be enthusiastic.

Mr. R. A. Greene, of New York City, broke the road record from New York to Boston last week, driving his own 16 h. p. four-cylinder gasoline Locomobile. The elapsed time was ten hours twenty-seven minutes, and the actual running time was eight hours fifty-seven minutes, beating the best previous time by exactly one hour. The object of this run of Mr. Greene's was to show up the reliable qualities of the Locomobile rather than to make a sensational speed performance, but a cut of one hour from the previous figures is certainly an impressive feat.

Richard Mansfield is an enthusiastic automobilist. Since he arrived in the city he has been doing the Park, Cliff and Presidio in machines from the Mobile Carriage Company and the Winton agency.

Mr. R. J. Mier and party of friends made a trip to San Jose on Sunday in Mr. Mier's Winton Touring car.

The West Coast Automobile Company has moved into their new quarters at 606 Van Ness avenue. The company is handling the Auto-car and Columbia vehicles.

Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Hunt and Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Brinegar made a record trip around the bay Sunday in the new Oldsmobile tonneau. The party reached Mr. George H. Osen's automobile store in San Jose at twelve o'clock. A large number of prospective purchasers, and those who had already placed their orders for Oldsmobile tonneaus, were on hand awaiting the arrival of the new machine, which certainly received a big reception. Mr. Osen, agent for the Pioneer Automobile Company at San Jose, has already placed orders for twenty-six Oldsmobiles of different types, and five additional orders were taken when the machine was shown.

Advices have been received from the factory of the Pierce Arrow that the new lot of one hundred four-cylinder Arrows have been started in the factory to supply the demands for such cars. This order alone represents $400,000, which will probably represent the largest output of four-cylinder cars thus far in the history of American automobiles.

Mr. Ferdinand Nelson has added a 1904 Winton Touring car, which he purchased from the Pioneer people, to his automobile stable.

Mr. J. A. Marsh, president of the Mobile Carriage Company, started over a week ago for an extended camping trip through the North. He has taken the tonneau off his car and provided a camp wagon with all requirements for camping out and home cooking.

Mr. C. L. Roy, the well known lumber man of Seattle, Washington, started from Tiaguano, Mexico, on May 8th, in a Winton touring car, en route to Seattle, Washington. There are only Mr. Roy and his chauffeur in the party, and they are making the trip by easy stages. Three days were spent in Los Angeles and two days in San Jose. Mr. Roy arrived here, after covering 1135 miles. He left on the nine o'clock boat Sunday morning via Sacramento and Portland, Oregon. Mr. Roy says that the only way to travel is in an automobile.

The Mobile Carriage Company has been advised by the George N. Pierce Co. that another carload of two-cylinder Arrows will be shipped out at an early date. The four-cylinder Arrow ordered for Mr. Livingston Jenks is expected to arrive about the middle of June. This is certainly one of the best cars that has ever been brought to the Coast.

Mr. F. A. Bennett, formerly agent for the Oldsmobile at Riverside, California, has taken the agency for the lines handled by the Pioneer Automobile Company, viz.: Oldsmobile, Stevens-Duryea, Winton, and Locomobile, for Alameda and Contra Costa Counties. Mr. Bennett will open a store and garage in Oakland within a very short time. He is a practical man, having had three years' experience in the Oldsmobile factory at Detroit, Michigan, and is a thoroughly up-to-date automobile man.

The representatives of the Pope-Toledo automobile have received several handsome and high-grade two and four-cylinder cars from the factory, and have extended an invitation to prospective buyers to inspect same. The management will extend a demonstration of these cars to all persons directly interested in automobiling. Pope-Toledos are of a very high order, and attract attention wherever seen.

During 1902, $862,960 worth of automobiles and motor cycles were imported by Germany. Official reports show that there was a decided increase during 1903, the amount being $1,218,000. Over two-thirds of the cars imported were of French manufacture.

The official reports state that during February, 538 motor cars were imported into Great Britain, their value amounting to $890,395. During the same length of time parts to the amount of $103,180 were imported, making a total of $993,575, which is nearly $288,000 more than the corresponding period last year. During the same period sixty-five British cars were exported, and together with parts sold abroad, the exports amounted to $135,336, an increase of nearly $28,000.

Although the motor boat race from Paris to the sea, otherwise called the Paris-Deauville race, takes place in August, twenty-eight racing boats have been entered. Among them are two Napier boats, one of 80, the other of 50 horsepower; Mercedes II, 90 horsepower, belonging to C. L. Charley; Serpollet, 100 horse-power, belonging to Gardner-Serpollet; Thornycroft, 60 horse-power, owned by M. Thornycroft, and several racers built by Clement-Bayard, the Hotchkiss Co., Panhard and Renault.

The records made and trophies awarded in competition speak more eloquently to a buying public than pages of high-colored advertising, and place the Darracq Cars in an enviable position as to speed, mechanical strength, endurance, reliability, hill climbing and touring.

The American Darracq Automobile Company states the popularity of Darracq cars is best attested by the fact that seventy-five per cent of all automobiles imported to the United States are Darracqs.

Model making as a pastime is the fondest recreation of Dr. Frank W. Brandow of Pittsfield, whose re-productions of noted ships, engines, flying machines and airships exhibited in New York won him unstinted praise and brought out offers from some of the largest houses in the country for his services. As Dr. Brandow produces his models for pleasure, and not for profit, all offers of his works were refused, and but one of his works has ever been sold. His 1902 model of an automobile, body of silver plate, running gear of oxidized silver, brass, copper, iron and steel entering into the construction of the work, was exhibited at the New York automobile show, and afterward by Tiffany of New York. Dr. Brandow refused $1000 for the model, stating that he felt that by the sale of the model he would be putting his work on a commercial basis, which he wished to avoid.

A new automobile record has been established between Boston and New York. On April 28th, Harry Fosdick decided to try for the Boston-New York automobile record. At 2.30 in the afternoon, in a 1904 Winton touring car, he made the start. The time was 9 hours and 57 minutes. No accidents, breakdowns, delays or stops, except for refreshment. A record ride in a record car—a stock Winton. Arriving and departing times were registered at various stopping places to assure authenticity. The time made was nearly as fast as some of the local trains of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, running between Boston and New York. It is believed that it will not be long before a regular established automobile service will be placed all through the East.

The following letter has been received by the Locomobile Company of New York:

"I have run the four-cylinder Locomobile purchased from you last November about five thousand miles. About four thousand miles of this was through the mountains in California, and in all that distance the engine never stopped of its own accord, and have had no repairs excepting a few spark plugs and punctures. I do not think any machine could give better satisfaction.

Yours truly,
DAVID H. GAINES.

LITERARY ENTERPRISE.

Prince Vladimir Vaniatsky, the talented Russian, who is a frequent contributor to the Overland Monthly and the Smart Set, is with his regiment in Manchuria. Previous to leaving for the front he was engaged on a secret mission for his Government, but found time to write two articles for the great Western magazine. His experiences on the field should enable him to write some good war stories when the trouble between Japan and Russia is settled.

Alice MacGowan Cooke, a frequent contributor to the Overland Monthly, has written a new book. It is called "Huldah." It is a Southern story, and is attracting considerable attention and large sales. Miss Cooke will have a detective story in the July number of the Overland Monthly.

Leigh Gordon Giltner, a bright and beautiful girl from the blue grass slopes of Kentucky, is another who is achieving fame as a writer in the Overland Monthly and Collier's Weekly. She is a prolific writer, with an easy style, and is winning over a large constituency of readers.

The new management of the Overland Monthly is making money for the owners, and for the first time in many years it may be said that this magazine is making friends and circulation fast. Its capital is to be increased, prosperous times are ahead, and a keen and capable management has demonstrated that the spirit of patriotism is never appealed to in vain on the Pacific Coast.

New machinery is to be added to the already large plant, and very soon changes will be made that will leave no excuse for any Californian who fails to subscribe to the best and the first Western magazine.

A To-Let Sign and Other Things at Berkeley

The extravaganza given by the graduating class of the University of California conspicuously refrained from pointed jibes at President Wheeler. In all the medley of song and jest there was not one prickly remark aimed at the "Froxie." The extravaganza was thoroughly sterilized by the authors so that it would not leave a bad taste in the Presidential mouth. They were evidently mindful of the impression created by last year's extravaganza, which was seasoned with peppery comments on the "Froxie's" administration. President Wheeler swallowed it, though. The sharp-sighted could see that some of the jests went down with a gulp. But Mrs. Wheeler, as she flounced out of the amphitheatre, remarked audibly to a group of friends: "They went entirely too far. It is disgraceful for the students to take such liberties with the faculty."

The extravaganza collaborators of this year did not keep on their kid gloves when it came to students' affairs. One of the hits of the performance was Beatrice Snow's imitation of Grace Llewellyn Jones in "Phedre." Before that French play was given in the amphitheatre, the managers cast their eye about for some college girl whose accent was not too table d'hôte to interpret the noble French play. They decided that there was no one with the proper combination of pronunciation and histrionic ability to take the part, so Miss Jones was registered at the University as a special student and played the leading role. Miss Jones read her lines very well, but she was handicapped by a desire to do the thing strictly a la Bernhardt, whom she had seen many times in the part. She carried a great deal of excess baggage around her feet, and she could not manage the trailing yards of skirt as does the divine Sara. Several times the audience held its breath with both hands for fear "Phedre" was not going to untangle herself. Miss Snow wore the same sort of tanglefoot skirt, and her violent pitchings forward were screechingly funny. In the love scene she decides not to poison herself because "zere is still Otto Schultze left," which was only understood by a few people in the audience. Mr. Schultze beat the college record last year by proposing to six girls. He was a member of the P Si U fraternity, and very much of a ladies' man, with an India rubber heart that a refusal scarcely dented, judging from the way he popped the question to one girl with a refusal from another still ringing in his ears. It was the custom of the girls before whose feet he laid his elastic heart to exchange notes with each other, and in at least four cases out of the six each girl attested that when she said "nay, nay," a real, live, damp tear-drop glistened in his manly eye. Rumor now has it that Mr. Schultze did such queer cardiac stunts with a view toward gathering data for an "experience" love story that would throb like the real thing. Three of the girls to whom he had proposed in the space of three weeks graduated this year, but there are several undergraduates left to tell innocent Freshmen of the "great and only" Schultze, who carried a "To-Let" sign on his heart that could be read across the campus.

Of course there was a "cherry" chorus in the extravaganza that gave a juicy version of Professor Moses' affair with the "Pie Biters." It seems that when the angered Professor refused to talk to the sorority girls on the subject, they sent their "house mother" around to demand an interview. A house mother is the lady who presides over the sorority house and keeps a motherly eye on the girls. The Pie Phi "house mother" is a lady of spirit, so she determined to beard Professor Moses in his den and show proof that her girls had a real estate agent's permission to pluck the blossoms. Professor Moses was not at home when the lady called, but he sent a note to the "frat" house, saying he had found her card, and would accept the apology offered by the girls. As the young ladies did not intend the house mother's visit in the nature of an apology, they sent word to that effect to the wily Moses, who sent back the maddening retort that he had accepted the girl's apology, and would consider the matter closed! As the "Pie Biters" believe he is the one who owes an apology, the situation is not without humor.

It was interesting to note the effect of Professor Moses' remarks at the alumni luncheon. When the learned gentleman scoffed at the "Florodora" tone, as he styled it, which the co-eds. have given college, the waitresses almost went on a strike. They were representative college girls who had been chosen to wait on the "old grads," and very prettily they performed the service. Even those who are not enthusiastic about co-education thought Professor Moses' remark in very bad taste at that time and place, and not a few voiced their sentiments sotto voce to the piqued waitresses, which put them into good humor at once. A gray-beard regent called one of the young ladies serving at the Moses table to his side, and whispered: "Give Professor Moses an extra lump of sugar in his coffee—it may help the ache in his temper." The Florodora faux pas has convinced every one that the Moses disposition needs sugar-coating.

Something unique happened in Bohemia one evening last week. A company of artists, known in the Bohemian and other clubs as the "fuzzy bunch," gave a farewell dinner in one of the commodious studios to Will H. Irwin, Sunday editor of the Chronicle, who leaves in a few weeks to take a position of importance on one of the New York papers.

All but one invited to the spread appeared on time. There was a polite wait, and then, when it was known that there would be a "vacant chair" at the table, the hosts had a long consultation as to the probability of getting some one to "fill in." Finally, it was agreed that a committee should go out on the street and find a "real Bohemian"—a hobo. The quest resulted in the finding of one Thomas Moran, who liked the idea of a good dinner with good fellows, but who hesitated before accepting the unusual "bid." He was not at all sure that he was not walking into a trap.

"What's your game?" he asked. He was assured that he was quite safe, and that he could count himself in the hands of his friends.

Quite ceremoniously, Moran was brought to the studio and treated with all honor, his sponsors passing the word around that there must be no joshing; that Mr. Moran must be taken quite seriously. The strange guest at the feast looked around furtively as he ate the tempting "goodies" and "substantials." It seemed to require more courage on his part to drink than to eat. He looked most apprehensively at the "Dago red," his face showing plainly that he was not altogether sure that the seductive viand was not loaded with knock-out drops. The second glass of wine went easier, and Thomas Moran began to mellow. When stories were in order, he added his pro rata of "experience" stories, to the keen delight of the "fuzzy bunch."

The jinks came in due order. A mock trial was proposed, but the guest of honor, Bill Irwin, said that he would not "play" unless Moran would consent to act as judge. By that time the suspicious hobo had not a suspicion left, and he agreed to play the role. The trial went on with fine spirit, and it was not long before every one present knew that there was nothing about police court procedure that "Judge Moran" did not know. Every one had a right to his "inferences" about the wisdom of Moran in Police Court lore.

At any rate the evening, like all good things in life, came to an end, but of one thing the artists were sure that they would not soon forget their experience with Moran. On the other hand they are equally positive that Moran will not soon forget his unexpected "square."

An amusing story is going the rounds just now in theatrical circles. One of the four typewriter girls playing at the Orpheum was dreadfully annoyed by the abuse of a certain local critic. This was the message she sent to him:

"Please say to that man that I think it is very unkind of him to try to take the bread and butter out of my mouth when I have four children and a husband, who is a dramatic critic, to support.

Mr. Martin Braun, masseur, has taken office rooms at the Wenban, 606 Sutter street. The public is cordially invited to inspect his method. Mr. Braun is a regular graduate of the Imperial University Hospital of Vienna.

The Political Situation

The Santa Cruz Convention still continues to be a subject of discussion in political circles, although the aftermath results will probably not be apparent until the August primaries and the September nominations. The Democrats have had rows before, and if their party continues to exist, they will probably have them again, but the row which culminated with the endorsement of Hearst at Santa Cruz is different from any of those which preceded it. To the Conservative element in the party it seems as though they have reached the parting of the ways, and as one of the most conspicuous members of the anti said to me: "We might as well fight it out to an end now as later. There is no chance of us carrying this State this year, and if the Democratic candidate comes within ten votes of a nomination he will win, because he will carry enough States to be able to lose California. It is impossible for us to win with Hearst on our back out here, and we must turn him down all along the line, and let him flock by himself if he will not be true to the party." To this man, as to many of the old-timers, it seems as though the party in endorsing Hearst had endorsed party treason, disloyalty to its nominees, has slurred the memory of Stephen M. White, and had repudiated all its best traditions. White's brother was present at Santa Cruz, and although he was not a delegate, he was offered a proxy, and was strongly urged to go on the stage and address the convention. He bears a striking resemblance to the late Senator, and it was thought he would have rallied all the admirers of Stephen around him, and that he would have put himself in line to be nominated for Governor two years from now. The Watsonville people, irrespective of party, hoped Ed. White would carry out that programme, but in the first place he is a very quiet, retiring man, and in the second he felt a delicacy in trading, as it were, on his relationship to the Senator. To one of his friends he said: "I declined to be a delegate because I did not think it would be good taste for me to go. If I had voted against the Hearst resolutions it would have been called a case of petty spite—if I had voted for them, I would have been endorsing all the things Hearst said of my brother. I preferred, therefore, to keep out entirely."

So far as I can judge from talking to a number of prominent Democrats, the programme is to ignore the Tarpey crowd entirely in making legislative nominations this summer, and to let the Examiner support them or not, as it chooses. Notwithstanding the recent interviews of Hearst declaring in Delphian language that he will support the ticket, to be nominated at St. Louis, it is the general opinion among his opponents that he will not, and I think they rather hope he will not, so that once for all they can read him out of the party.

If the Republicans had striven to emphasize their harmony they could not have done it better than by the delegates at large whom they nominated to go to Chicago, and the alternates who are to accompany them. The Governor, of course, represents his wing of the party, just as Judge McKinley represents the Gage wing, and every one knows how those two factions have loved each other in the past. Then there is John D. Spreckels, who was intensely anti-Gage and anti-Burns; then there is Ruef, who ran an independent candidate for Mayor, and Spreckels and Knight, who supported the regular ticket, and Rule, of Los Angeles, who represents the Bulla anti-McKinley wing of the party in the southern metropolis. Another interesting delegate is Joseph Steffens, the Sacramento banker and trustee of the State Library, who is the father of Lincoln Steffens, whose articles in McClure's on political corruption in cities have attracted so much attention. Frank Short, who wants to be Governor, goes as a district delegate from Fresno, and Mose Gunst recalls the Colonel Dan Burns regime as a delegate from this city, but he is the only one of the old Burns crowd on the list. If the delegates are any indication of the feeling in the party, and they ought to be a very safe barometer to go by, the G. O. P. is spelling harmony this year with a capital H.

I am told that George Knight is to make a speech seconding the nomination of Roosevelt, and that Delmas was especially selected to perform the same office for Hearst, so California will be well up the line in oratory. By the way, there is some question as to whether Hearst shall pose as of New York or of California. It was originally proposed to have him hail from New York, but I understand that some of his advisors think that a bad plan, as the New York delegation is instructed for Parker, and Hearst would be put in the position of not having a vote from his own State. Now, however, that he has the California delegation in his pocket, it is thought it would be wiser to have his nomination come from this State, and in that case Delmas may be asked to make the nomination speech instead of the seconding. This, however, I understand, has not yet been definitely settled.

Will Green of the Colusa Sun, in answer to a correspondent who asks if he will support the nomination of Hearst, says that if nominated he will give Hearst "that full measure of support that he has given the Democratic party of California." It is evident that the Sun will not contain much political news next summer if Hearst is nominated at St. Louis. It is announced that Livernash has changed his mind and will be a candidate for Congress in the district he at present occupies. The result of the announcement has made the nomination seem more desirable than even on the Republican ticket, and Tom Reardon, Jules Kahn and others are all trying to secure the prize. I may mention, however, that I have it from very good Democratic authority that Livernash will have no easy thing to secure the re-nomination, and that McNab, among others, will see that he stays at home, where his nervous system can recuperate. Wynn is going to have the fight of his life to get a re-nomination, too, and from present appearances he, too, will be allowed to save his campaign expenses.

GOT INTO THE WRONG ROOM.

A muscular Irishman strolled into the civil service examination room in the city hall, where candidates for the police force are put to a physical test.

"Strip," ordered Mr. Angney, police surgeon.

"What's that?" answered the uninitiated.

"Get your clothes off; be quick about it," said the doctor.

The Irishman disrobed and permitted the doctor to measure his chest and legs and pound his back.

"Hop over this bar," ordered the doctor.

The man did his best, landing on his back.

"Now double your knees and touch the floor with your hands." He sprawled, face downward on the floor. He was indignant, but kept silent.

"Jump under the cold shower," ordered the doctor.

"Sure, that's funny," muttered the applicant.

"Now, run around the room ten times to test your heart and wind," directed the doctor.

The candidate rebelled.

"I'll not. I'll stay single."

The doctor looked surprised.

"What's more," continued the Irishman, "I don't see what all this fussing's got to do with a marriage license."

He had strayed into the wrong bureau. Later he got a license, giving the name of Joseph McGlynn.—Philadelphia Correspondent in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

"Well, that dear old lady who kept the boarding house around the corner has quit. She lost from the start." "I knew she would when I discovered that she put real meat in her hash and used fruit that actually grew on trees and bushes. I presume that honesty continues to be the best policy, but it calls for surplus funds in these days."

Cholly—Oh, no! The widow is not handsome. Ferdy—But is she interesting? Cholly — Deucedly so—to a chap as heavily in debt as I am.

HIS HUGE HEAD.

"I reckon, my friend," began a somewhat moss-grown, but eminently astute candidate for the Arkansas legislature, addressing an outpouring of the toiling masses on Izzard County, "that everything that was worth sayin'—and considerable more, too—about the tariff and silver and the inickertous trusts, and all such as that, was said before I broke into the political aren'y, so I'll just remark that if I am elected I'll be too busy attendin' to my duties to do more than come back here after a spell and make you-all a sort of speech of thanks; but if I ain't elected I'll have plenty of time to make you two long speeches, and mebbly more, and kiss all the babies, and otherwise prepare the way for being elected the next time. That is all I've got to say at present, except that I am in your hands from this time forth, and the keg is over yonder in Plunk Sagg's barn right now. A word to the wise is, or ort to be, sufficient." It is almost redundant to add that this broad-minded patriot was at election time rushed into the office he craved, with all the whoop and eclat of a cattle stampede.—Puck.

"COPPERED" THE PROPHET.

This is a story a weather almanac prophet, who may be called Thompson, tells on himself. While recently visiting a Jersey town he went into a store to buy a cigar. He made his purchase and was about to leave the store when the proprietor remarked:

"It's a pity you have no umbrella for it's going to rain soon."

"I think you are wrong in your prediction," replied Thompson. "It looks like fine weather to me."

"Well," said the cigar store man, "I'll bet a dollar it will rain before noon."

"Very good. I'll call in again to-day and collect," said Thompson. After leaving the store he had gone only a few blocks when he was well drenched by a sudden shower. Thompson was struck by the man's prediction, and being always intent on the interest of his almanac he went back to the store and was received by the proprietor with a broad grin.

"You see, I was right, after all."

"Yes," admitted Thompson.

"Here's your dollar, and I'll give you another if you tell me how you knew of this rain."

"Why, the truth is, I have an almanac called Thompson's Almanac, and the fellow is such a notorious liar that whenever he predicts a fine day I always know it will be the exact opposite. I looked at the almanac early this morning and prepared for rain."—New York Press.

"If any one says anything wrong it is proper to make him take it back, isn't it?" she asked. "Why, yes," answered the old gentleman, without looking up from his paper. "And if he does anything wrong, you should make him take that back, too?" "Why, of course, you—What's that?" suddenly waking up. "Well, Jack kissed me and I made him take it back." "Take what back?" "The kiss, because it was wrong." "Oh, you did!" "Yes. And I never knew such a persistent wrong-doer as he has been since that time."

The Band at Santa Cruz

"Music hath charms," and Santa Cruz
 Finds martial music charming,
 But some there are who cannot choose
 But find it most alarming.
 They have no ear for what is sweet,
 No taste for what is grand;
 They fall and faint, if they chance to meet
 A good non-union band.
 Thus the party Democratic,
 Or the part of it called Hearst;
 With a craze that's quite fanatic,
 Is indubitably cursed.
 Morality is thrown aside
 And viciousness is fanned.
 Esthetic sense is satisfied
 With a common union band.

Sousa may march, for all they care;
 Wagner may sow his discords,
 DeKoven's music pierce the air,
 They have no joy in his chords.
 They block their ears against the sound—
 They wander round the stand,
 And howl their rage and fear profound
 At a good non-union band.
 For the gentleman called Tarpey,
 With his manner most benign,
 Has the genius of a harpey
 Who turned honest men to swine,
 And Mr. Camminetti,
 With his ever-gladsome hand,
 Is a trifle less than petty
 Towards a good non-union band.

And Hearst may fret, and Hearst may fume,
 The matter's plainer growing—
 We can't afford to push the boom
 Of those who make such showing.
 A coward lot who fear to say
 And show for what they stand—
 A paltry crowd that sends away
 A good non-union band.
 Thus the party Democratic
 Plays a most ignoble game,
 And its glad foes are ecstatic
 To see it play the same.
 And we ask, no other feeling
 Than the kindest, understand,
 Why the men that wink at stealing
 Should be outraged at a band.

AT BEDTIME.

By Phoebe Lyde in Lippincott's

The oak tree spreads his mighty boughs
Above me where I lie,
The sleepy flowers kiss my cheek,
The wandering wind goes by.

Amid a shadowy mist of leaves
The shining stars are set;
I wish that I could pluck off one,
Just like a violet.

If I were tall enough to reach
Beyond the robin's nest,
I'd steal a little baby star
And wear it on my breast.

HEIMWEH.

By Helen T. Churchill in Woman's Home Companion

The skies are blue, they say;
Alas! for me
The skies are leaden-gray;
I naught can see

Of azure tint or golden sunbeam bright
O'er all the landscape—dreary, hopeless night.

And scenes are fair, I'm told,
And hearts are gay;
The fairest I behold
As vain display;

And loathing, turn where others laugh and sing,
Sad, sick at heart—a hopeless, wounded thing.

One spot alone on earth
Is fair to me—
There centers all the mirth,
There I would be.

There, only there, God's sunlight pierces thro',
And all the heaven paints with stainless blue.

You praise this land as fair,
Its streams, its bow'rs;
The common weeds were there
As rarest flow'rs—

The fields Elysian. Ah! why should we roam?
One spot alone enchants—we call it home!

ON A PORTRAIT OF THE YOUNG TOLSTOI.

By Cecilia Beaux in Century

Grave soldier, molded in the lines of youth—
Young prophet, rich in all the fruits of age:
No crimson wine of manhood could assuage
The famine in thy burning heart for Truth.
Thy hunger fed on dreams of human ruth;
Of Pity nurtured in a lion's cage;
Of Princes, won to earn a yeoman's wage,
And Honor guarded by a hand uncouth.
Thy thought within thy beauty lifts its power
From eloquence to triumph, in thy face;
In dual potency the herald hour
Of conquering wisdom, garlanded by grace:
Thy voice the thunder of a nation's cries,
But gentle as a little maid's replies.

THE FABLE OF THE GUILLESS ASS AND THE PARTING OF THE WAYS.

The Creator of All Things, in Wisdom and Forethought, provided that the Incapable shall have Wealth and the Capable shall Win Wealth. But to all men the Genii gave the power of Self-Will and Original Thought. The Genii made it possible for man to become Perverted through the Exercise of Self-Will. And thus it came to pass that the Yellow Pest, through the exercise of Uncurbed Self-Will and Unleashed Passion, became a nuisance and a stench. By the advice of the Birds of Evil Counsel, who feed on the Crumbs they may steal from his table, he conceived a Lust for the Presidency, even as he had conceived Other Lusts, and through his money, gratified them. But there is a Bottom to Every Barrel, and he now sits at the Parting of the Ways dejectedly thinking over the Situation. If he perseveres in his Lust he will go down to defeat; if he retreats, he will find himself face to face with the poor-house. God Help the Witless Rich.

Russia continues to blame her sister nations for not compelling Japan to rest between rounds.

The Hearst barrel begins to give out that hollow sound when it is tapped.

Cut out his money, and Hearst comes near to being the rimless cipher of Presidential politics.

The South will be solid for the man who has found an ant that likes the cotton-boll weevil for a quick lunch delicacy.

Has somebody convinced the "longest leased liar in the world" that Hearst has not yet been elected to the Presidency?

The bad smell at the ferry depot is declared to have absolutely no connection with the prosperity of the Harbor Commission's "business men."

Gentlemen with means are being courteously invited by the "push" to search themselves for Senatorial aspirations.

An Atlantic City man has divorced his wife because she wore a bathing costume in which she resembled an underwear advertisement in a magazine.

If the Schmitz family must have a "public convenience at the corner of Geary and Market streets, doubtless San Francisco must submit, although this seems to be a queer taste in monuments.

The one San Francisco organization which desecrated Decoration Day was composed of otherwise estimable citizens, who may be sufficiently identified by saying that they went to their picnic bare-legged.

If the Supervisors grant the request of the Labor Council and help boycott "unfair" firms, it would seem quite proper to assign policemen for service as union "pickets."

New England may be the country of abandoned farms, but two of Pennsylvania's wealthiest districts, which haven't had a birth in twelve months, are the region of the abandoned cradle.

As to the petulent parent in Fresno County who smashed a young lady school teacher over the head with a bottle of ink, it is to be hoped that by this time he has been measured for a suit of tar and feathers.

What labor unions most need is a closer union with common sense and the principle of live and let live.

Just to show how intimately the automobile has entered into American life, it is recorded that a baby was born in a moving whizz-car the other day in Connecticut.

Senator Quay's lamented decease is attributed to a sauerkraut orgy. Unless we have been misinformed about the manufacture of this delicacy, we know now what was rotten in Pennsylvania politics.

"The same elusive needle in the hay stack * * * is again the fly in the ointment," says an editorial in the Call. This, if true, is a matter of interest not only to science but to the steel industry.

Firemen at Santa Cruz were called to put some swallows out of a school house, which is more unique than taking swallows to put out the fire that burns on "the morning after."

A lady named Dollarhide saves two men from drowning in Northern California. Moved and seconded that she be given a medal and a more expensive name.

Labor unionism is the sworn foe of competition, hence a murderer of the life of trade. It is the mightiest trust in America, and all the more dangerous because it is run by irresponsible wild asses.

A distinguished cleric of Brooklyn prophesies that in a few years it will be considered vulgar to be rich. We should like to have an instantaneous photograph of some one refusing to accept a fat legacy on that account.

A non-union watchman with an unfair pistol fired a bullet not bearing a union label into the person of a "picket," who was merely trying to wreck a boycotted livery stable. The Labor Council desires that the watchman shall be boiled in oil.

A rich man of New Jersey wanted his house painted white with bright yellow shutters, but the painters struck rather than obey orders. It is refreshing to know that there are some things which even a union man won't do.

It is cabled from London that a once beautiful American woman lost her place as favorite in the smart set when she cut off her hair, though her fortune remained as large as ever. And we had called our British cousins mercenary!

The life-term prisoners at San Quentin and Folsom are appealing to the public for help in a movement to set them all at liberty—a movement sure to be generally approved, if the liberty begins with a neck-tie social.

A Fool and His Money

William Randolph Hearst is almost all that a man ought not to be. His mother, Mrs. Phoebe A. Hearst, is all that a good woman can be—gentle, refined, modest, charitable, sympathetic, helpful to all that is worth helping. The mother builds up, the son tears down. The mother aids men and women toward goodness and usefulness. The son corrupts men and debauches women. These two form a painful, a pitiful antithesis, matching against a wise and benignant influence—an influence that blights and pollutes and rots.

This wastrel son of a noble mother has before now brought shame and sorrow upon her, but the just pride of race and name, and that divine quality of mercy which is the essence of motherhood, has kept her from disavowal of him, has even led her to let him dip his hands anew into her private fortune for the furtherance of his scandalous and foolish pursuit of honors that will never be awarded to him or to such as he is. The mother has already felt the drain and the strain. Her estate, large as it may be, will not suffice for the purchase of the Presidency, or even of a nomination. Mrs. Hearst's money has been diverted from the channels through which, under her own control, it flowed to the enrichment and betterment of mankind. Instead of being employed to make useful citizens out of children otherwise foredoomed to the gutter, the jail, the asylum and the almshouse, instead of going to educate struggling young men and women into usefulness and helpfulness in the upbuilding of the republic, instead of being a powerful, silent factor for the right and against the wrong, this great fortune has become, in the hands of the son, an engine of evil. It has been poured out all over the land like a contaminating flood. It has gone for the purchase of men's souls and the buying of their honor. The Hearst money has jingled across the bars of vile saloons, paying for whiskey to make drunkards of sober men, who once drunken, might be made dishonest. His own inheritance the son has devoted as he pleased to the private debauching of men and women. Now it is said he has laid unclean hands upon the estate of his mother, for the debauchery of cities and States, for the purchase of a party and the dishonor of a nation.

The early results are not pleasant to record. Already Mrs. Hearst has been driven to retrenchment. Within the last few days she has been forced abruptly to cut off her support of the magnificent kindergarten at Washington, which she founded ten years ago, an institution which bears her name and has stood all these years a splendid monument to her goodness, living testimony of her high endeavors to make better the lives of her less fortunate fellows. That institution must now close its doors. The children it was redeeming to humanity must go back to the gutters of the slums.

Next comes a peremptory order to discontinue the most important and effective of Mrs. Hearst's benefactions at the University of California. There will be no more money from her purse for the charitable enterprises which have made it possible for poor young women to go to college, earning their way up the steps of higher education. No more Hearst money for those well-contrived adjuncts of the University which kept their deserving beneficiaries morally clean and physically sound. The Young women's Christian Association, the Women's Clubs, the School of Domestic Industries, the College Settlement, had flourished amazingly, and had proved of immense importance in forwarding the cause of education. Now they must lapse and die. In a word, the irrigating system under which wide fields were made to burgeon in beauty and fairness, has become an open sewer, foul, fetid, a stench under the sun, a dank and noisome breeding place of all vileness and corruption.

It is nothing to him that his way is marked by the festering carcasses or bleaching bones of the men and women he has ruined. It will not be surprising—indeed it is almost expected—that soon Mrs. Hearst will announce that she is compelled to cease altogether her giving to the University to which, apart from the too-meagre appropriations of the State, she has been the mainstay of support, to which she is tacitly pledged to donate a large part of her fortune. Meanwhile it is possible that the money of the Hearst estate is to be poured into the most scandalously corrupt political adventure this country has seen and suffered from.

As toward Mrs. Hearst, the public can feel nothing but sympathy and good will. It well understands how she has been misled into belief that her son's campaign was to be an honest one, and that a large section of his countrymen was calling him to the White House. It wonders whether she may not now begin to see the truth, and whether her statement of the reasons for withdrawing her support from this fine group of charitable and educational institutions is not a natural effort to hide her sorrow. "Certain of my investments," she is reported as saying, "have turned out to be unprofitable." Is that, in effect, announcement that her son's falsity and faithlessness have been made apparent to her when it was too late? The "investments" were certainly not mere business ventures of her own; they were, unquestionably, investment based upon her faith in a son who is unworthy of even his mother's faith. It is, as we hold, natural that Mrs. Hearst should keep to herself the real reason for putting an end thus suddenly to her good works—natural and even laudable, inasmuch as a man's mother is commonly the last to turn away from when his sin has found him out. But none the less, the true nature of Mrs. Hearst's "unprofitable investments" cannot be concealed.

Good authority has it that Hearst's first year in New York—a year devoted to the yellow kind of journalism and the scarlet kind of women—made an $800,000 hole in the estate left by his father. Following this came sharply a shut down against the wastrel. Equally dependable authority says that the Presidential phase of Hearst's foolishness was originally designed by the leeches that fatten on his body—the Lawrences, the Carvalhos, the Brisbanes and a cluster of smaller parasites—to cover another series of raids upon the estate. Hearst, however, took the false for the real, and without regard to cost or consequence, began to dream his silly dream of greatness which presently seemed to him so much a reality that he went far beyond the plots and plans of his parasites, mapping out and carrying out a campaign of unexampled corruption and gigantic expense. The outcome has been layer after layer of mortgages plastered upon his properties—they are said to total $5,000,000—and such inroads upon the estate held by his mother have been made that she can no longer contribute to the charities and other good works which she founded and had hoped ultimately to leave as permanent establishments.

THE PASSING OF QUAY.

When Senator Matthew S. Quay came to die he summoned to his bedside the chief lieutenants of his political army, and gave them his final directions as to the course of his machine after he had passed away. Sustained by stimulants given by his physicians, this worn-out old man, pausing for a moment upon the threshold of eternity, made his political testament, and disposed thereby of the future welfare of the great State of Pennsylvania, which for a quarter century he had ruled, as in the olden days the feudal lords ruled their wide domains. His main desire was to perpetuate his name and the dominions of his family. Therefore, he directed that his son should succeed him in the United States Senate. With his dying breath he made disposition of the greatest gift within the power of the people of the Keystone State. His vassals listened to his injunctions, bowed their heads, and promised to carry out his will. They turned back the pages of history, and were, in fact, so many liege men of some over-lord of the middle ages, swearing at the bedside of their dying chieftain that the glory of his name should continue in the person of his son, and that they, with all the strength of their various loyal battalions would faithfully perform the duties he laid upon them. It was a strange scene to be enacted in this day, and in this country, and gives occasion to some thought upon the oft-vaunted liberties and prerogatives of the supposedly free citizens of this republic. It demonstrated in a dramatic manner, and far more conclusively than a volume of essays upon political conditions, the poor estate to which we have fallen.

Quay was a machine politician. His personality embodied all that the machine represents. His main, his sole desire, was to win success. With him, the ends justified the means. Whatever may have been his personal character, it is notorious that under his management the Pennsylvania machine honey-combed the State, and Philadelphia, its chief city, with corruption. His underlings made a study of political practices in New York and elsewhere, to the end that the Quay machine might have the benefit of the most approved methods for robbing the public. The city and the State obeyed his commands, the while the people, writhing under such control, sought to break the bonds he had sealed upon them. With such a record he was honored with high place, and his death is almost considered a matter of national importance. His shadow will hover over Pennsylvania for many years to come. Will his political executors carry out his will, or, like Quay, will they desert the colors of the fallen leader, and seek the chieftainship, each man for himself? And the people! Bah! The people will grunt and groan and complain, as they have done in this city, but they will refuse to join political clubs, will refuse to vote at the primaries, will refuse to perform their duty as citizens, and the robber barons will continue their raids upon public treasury.

BRAUNHART'S RESOLUTION.

In the Board of Supervisors a resolution has been submitted by Supervisor Braunhart, directing the Committee on Charter Amendment to report to the Board an Amendment to the Charter providing a means to raise money for the conversion, construction and equipment of the Geary street road. Braunhart proposes that the amendment shall provide for a special tax in excess of the "dollar limit" of taxation, sufficient to complete the road in accordance with the plans heretofore made by the City Engineer. This proposition, if carried through, as proposed by Mr. Braunhart, would establish a precedent which would certainly far outweigh in its injurious effects upon the city any possible benefit the community might derive by the acquisition of the railroad as a public utility. It is a direct attack upon the "dollar limit," which is one of the main safeguards the charter gives the people against too deep an incursion into the public treasury by the band of patriots at the City Hall. If a special tax be levied for the Geary street road, why not a special tax for an increase in the Fire Department, for a street-sweeping plant, for a water system, for a sewer system, and so on ad infinitum, until we are buried beneath Braunhart's scheme of taxation?

The charter provides a safe and suitable method for the acquisition of public utilities by the issuance of bonds authorized by the direct vote of at least two-thirds of the voters voting thereon at a special election. Twice have the people voted on the Geary street road proposition, and twice have they rejected it. The inference is that the people are not eager to own the road. But even if the two-thirds vote in favor of the scheme were now assured, no good reason is apparent for deviating from the charter plan. It was the purpose of the freeholders to separate, so far as possible, all municipal elections from State and Presidential elections. It was thought such separation would result in benefit to the city, inasmuch as it would permit the people to elect good officials when their minds were unbiased by the partisanship that always accompanies a general election. For similar reasons, it was decreed that bonds for the purchase of public utilities should be voted for at a special election held for that purpose only. Now Supervisor Braunhart, who has always proclaimed himself a staunch supporter of the charter, proposes to amend that instrument in the hope that at a general election the people will give the Geary street road scheme a two-thirds vote. In other words, he hopes to force on the citizens, by a political trick, a proposition they have twice rejected in the manner provided by the existing law. Braunhart thinks that as a city father he should be paternal in his care for the public welfare. We agree with Supervisor Comte that the existing provisions of law are sufficient to permit the people to demonstrate their will. If they want the Geary street road they will give it a two-thirds vote at a special election called for the purpose. There is no occasion for the Braunhart amendment.

LABOR DAY AT PRICE AND ONE-HALF.

This is the country of many holidays, and the Labor Day holiday is one of them. In connection with the labor holiday, it is important to note that it is a compulsory holiday. There is a fine attached for non-participation, and the workingman who has no desire to waste a day in idle glorification is assessed for non-attendance. The employer who finds himself on account of pressure of business forced to employ labor on this day of days finds that he will be charged with time and a half, and in many instances with double pay. If it is necessary, in order to make up for the extra holiday, to run the shop on the following Sunday, or over time, it is only possible to do so by facing the same conditions that provide for the Labor Day festivities. Double time and pay and a half is the general rule. There may be some sense in curtailing the earning capacity of the workingman and the employer in this way, and the proponent of the extra and useless holiday enjoys a brief glee at the expense of the real workingman and his employer, but we cannot see any sound sense in the proceeding.

TREASON AGAINST THE STATE MILITIA.

When non-identification with the militia or naval establishment of a State is made the standard of worth and fitness for membership in a labor union, the crime of treason to the State and nation has been committed. But for all that, certain labor unions of California, and practically of all the States, have established exactly that standard of eligibility in the chief industrial centers, and so determinedly is the rule being enforced that the act is in fact a conspiracy en mass against the lives and property of non-conforming citizens, and an assault upon the life of the Government. It is not armed treason coming boldly into the open and defying authority, but rather as the assassin comes smiling from his hiding, only to stab.

The reason given by labor union leaders for this assault upon what is the nation's armed defense against hostile invasion of the country and police protection to the community, is that when a labor strike is ordered such members of unions as belong to the militia are obliged to take up arms against their fellow unionists and shoot them down, if need be, to prevent deadly assaults upon citizens and the destruction of property. Here we have a volunteered admission that deadly assaults upon citizens and the destruction of property are a probable, or at least a possible, resort of strikers when other agencies for the overthrow of employers fail of their aim; and the inference is that such acts of violence would be justified by these labor leaders' code of labor unionism's rights, and that if the arm of the militia, acting as a police power, is weakened by withdrawing from it its main source of strength—workingmen—strikers would find little or no resistance, no matter to what lengths they might elect to go.

There is ingenuity and cunning in this vicious and treasonable scheme to paralyze the arm of law and order that it may be powerless to resist the onslaughts of labor strikes upon the rights of persons and property. The line which separates such labor unionism from anarchism is too vaguely marked to be located; besides, the ultimate purpose of the one differs in no way from that of the other, which is the abolition of all law and all ethical codes and social conventions, each one being a law unto himself, his passions blazing the path of his going and coming.

But the intimation that labor organizations as a whole are giving this diabolical conspiracy their support is as false and as malicious as are the hearts of the traitors who are back of it all. The fact is, only one here and there of the army of skilled labor is found in this treasonable and murderous combine. Men who have spent years in the practice and study of mechanical art and the science of construction, are neither political, ethical nor social destructionists. It is the hewers of wood and the drawers of water in the great field of production—men who do not think, do not reason—whom these professional labor agitators are leading by the nose into rebellion against the peace and dignity and safety of the State and of society.

But who are the real traitors and conspirators? Who are they that are playing upon and utilizing for themselves the product of the venomous schemes of these professional agitators? Who are they who are feeding these hot-beds of treason and anarchism with the fuel of hatred of law and order? What is the influence back of this conspiracy to disarm the State that crime and lawlessness may have no fear of the law?

This evil force and influence is not confined to one man, nor to many scores of men, but by mutual consent and for personal advantage it has embodied itself in a ready-made individualized human center of boundless political ambition and egotism that is in perfect accord with the purpose of this aggregation of evil forces, and that center of political and social and industrial evil is William Randolph Hearst, who, as an aspiring candidate for the Presidency of the United States, stands before all the people as a tool of the traitors who are conspiring to destroy the machinery of the law's operation. He, William Randolph Hearst, as a candidate for the nomination for President, represents all of such labor unionism as are in this treasonable plan to hang law and order upon the gibbet of social, religious and political corruption.

SMELLS TO HEAVEN.

Harbor Commissioner Spear has gone East. He proposes to look over the harbor facilities of leading Eastern cities and will try to incorporate the result of his investigations in the management of the city front. We can expect an inoculation of the New York variety of graft and nepotism on his return.

If "our Charley" was really in earnest it would be in order to suggest to him that he go to Seattle. He would find in the northern metropolis a better system for the handling of freight and people than obtains anywhere in the United States.

There is only one redeeming element in this Eastern junket of Commissioner Spear. During his absence some one connected with the office may become imbued with sufficient insane ambition to clean out the ferry building to such an extent that it will cease smelling like a monkey cage. It has been said that it is impossible to prevent the various odors that attack every arrival from across the bay, but the Commissioners themselves prove the untruth of the statement. Just before the arrival of President Roosevelt, the News Letter called attention to the odor, and there was a general scramble at the ferry. For two weeks the place did not smell. And then they forgot. Perishable goods, animals, dogs and canary birds, parrots and terrapins are housed under the ferry sheds. Halibut and other fish help make a symphony in smell.

This is the first appreciation the Eastern visitor and intending settler gets of San Francisco. Why is this so? Because our Commissioners pay more attention to securing jobs for their henchmen and relatives than the business of the State of California.

How to Know the Butterflies.

John Henry Comstock and Anna Botsford Comstock are the authors of one of the most delightfully written and engagingly produced work on butterflies which has ever been published. It is divided into three parts. A General Account of Butterflies; The Classification of Butterflies; the Skippers. The first of these parts gives an examination of the relation of butterflies to other insects, a short but sufficient sketch of the structure of butterflies and their clothing, a summary of the various processes of metamorphosis which are to be found in butterfly life, and a study of that life with some very valuable hints to the collector in regard to making his captures, preserving his specimens, watching the development of the creature through its various stages of metamorphosis, and storing and labeling the specimens taken. The second part deals with the ten great classes of butterflies, gives an account of their general characteristics, with the scientific as well as the ordinary name, and the text is accompanied by the most beautifully executed plates of the various specimens. These plates are simply excellent, and the writer of this would, years ago, when butterfly hunting was a new and delightful experience, have given many hours of labor for the chance of possessing such pictures as these. "The Skippers," says the writers, "are commonly classed with the butterflies; for this reason they are discussed here, although the writer believes that they constitute a super-family distinct from the butterflies. The skippers are so-called on account of their peculiar mode of flight." Then an account of this class of insect is given. It would be difficult to praise this work too highly. It meets a want, and should lead to the following of a very healthy and pleasant pursuit.

Nature's Comedian.

This is one of those novels which admittedly study temperament, and so comes in that class in which Henry James and John Oliver Hobbes reign. It is a fairly good piece of work, but it must be confessed that it does not rank with either of the two masters already mentioned. The worst of this kind of writing is that it always challenges comparison. A story which is written for the reader pass an hour or two free from the worries and perplexities of life, may always be taken on its merits and gauged according to its power to please, and the success with which it accomplishes its prime purpose. But a novel which sets out to describe a temperament and to solve a personal equation, is so entirely a piece of work, so advertisedly a study, that the comparison of other work of the same kind leaps spontaneously to the mind. If one sets out to write a psychological essay, one must expect to have the essay criticised and compared with the work of other psychologists. Harold Dunville, an actor, is one of nature's comedians, not a tragic comedian like Meredith's Lasalle, but a poor sort of actor man who was able to hold the center of the theatrical stage and to make money by the playing of second-rate theatrical pieces. "His very clever and convincing impersonations always strike us as being rather the result of a rare personal gift than of study or schooling. It is as yet impossible to pronounce him a great actor, and equally impossible, of course, to deny that he has become a successful one." So the book opens with a summary of the principal character, and closes in the following words: "He was in many ways a charming, attractive sort of being. A genius he certainly was not, and a satisfactory success he never could have become in any walk of life. I don't think that he had it in him to care to the extent which is really indispensable about anything or anybody; not even about himself."

This backboneless sort of individual is the character whose movements, which consist for the most part of a series of more or less uninteresting flirtations, and a futile attempt to stand for a Parliamentary election, are supposed to engage our attention. It will be seen that the soup is rather thin. True, there are two or three persons living who might have made a great piece of work out of the materials, but W. E. Norris is not one of them.

Mr. Norris is, generally speaking, so charming a writer, and this reviewer has so much pleasure and satisfaction from his work as a rule, that it requires an effort to state that this novel is not up to the standard, and that the purely psychological does not appear to be a satisfactory field for the display of the talents of a writer who is as a rule so successful.

The Poems of Henry Abbey.

This is the fourth edition of Henry Abbey's poems, and is the complete tale of his poetic work as far as he cares to preserve it to the present time. The author says: "Some of them should not be here, perhaps, but they have been copied and recited often, and are beyond recall."

It is not a pleasing task to criticise poetical work adversely, and in this case, fortunately, there is no need to do so. The poetry nowhere reaches a high level, but the author would not claim that for it. It has been described as "melodious, graceful and inherently poetic," and that is about as near as we can get to describing the general characteristics of the verse. Some of the expressions are particularly happy, and there is a distinct appreciation, none the less true for being simply expressed, of the beauty of nature. Mr. Abbey is very sincere and has a particular faculty of seizing upon and expressing pathos. He has a good group of melodious verse, not in the grand style, nor even marked by any distinction, but on the whole sweet and correct, which is much more than can be said of most of the verses turned out by more ambitious hands.

It was a surprise to everybody who listened to the testimony in Judge Heacock's court involving the removal of Hyde and Dimond to Washington for trial to learn how little evidence there was to prove the crimes alleged in the indictment. An immense amount of testimony was taken, something like 4,000 pages, but it is related to everything in the land field except the real point at issue.

The indictment alleged that Hyde and Benson had conspired six years ago to purchase school lands in California and Oregon by fraudulent means; that in pursuance of the conspiracy they had used the names of fictitious people, and had induced living persons to purchase lands for their (Hyde's and Benson's) benefit; that in pursuance of this conspiracy Hyde and Benson had bribed forest supervisors to create forest reserves within certain boundaries, and clerks to facilitate the approval of selections under the forest reserve act.

Notwithstanding the fact that the witnesses were all called by the Government, and came from all points of the compass, from Portland, Ore., on the north; Washington, D. C., on the east, and Tucson on the south, there was no testimony submitted that showed conspiracy, none that showed the use of fictitious names, and as to bribery, the extent of the showing was that Benson had paid some money to Washington clerks to hasten action on his selections.

The most damaging evidence, and in fact the only evidence worthy of consideration, came from one McCusker of Portland, Oregon, who testified that Schneider came there, and induced about a dozen of McCusker's friends to purchase school lands, and that Schneider paid for the lands and took deeds directly afterwards, but it was not shown that Hyde was cognizant of the method of acquiring titles, and Hyde says, in fact, that the first information that he had as to the way in which lands were purchased came from the testimony in court. He simply took the titles as they came to him.

We do not see how it is possible for the Government to secure a conviction for any crime under the indictments. The proceedings seem to be largely political and part of a fight in the Interior Department against the present land laws. The same questions are involved and the facts are substantially the same, as those in dozens of cases that have already been before the courts under the timber and stone act, and the Government has uniformly been defeated. It is thoroughly well settled that a person has a right to sell his land after entry in the land office, and even if large tracts are purchased by one person, the transaction is legal unless it be shown that there was an express contract between the entry man and his grantee made prior to entry in the land office. In Hyde's case it is admitted he became the owner of a large area which had been entered under the school land law, but it is not shown that the entries were made under any contract with him, in the absence of which there was no crime committed.

The way to reach cases of this kind is to repeal the laws which make abuses possible. A citizen has a perfect right to take advantage of any Act of Congress, and it is a question for the judgment of Congress alone as to whether or not the laws for the sale of public lands are good or bad. If they are bad, the laws should be repealed.

The particular fight in Hyde's case seems to be against the forest reserve lieu land act, as to which there is an impression that whoever locates land in that way is in some manner defrauding the Government. The fact is, that the Act of Congress under which such selections were made was passed at the instance of certain Eastern societies that had made a special study of forest preservation, and were largely instrumental in formulating the present Governmental policy relative thereto. The Act embodied an invitation by the United States to owners of lands within forest reserves to surrender their holdings and select lands in lieu thereof elsewhere, and the intrinsic value of the land surrendered had nothing to do with its value to the Government. The law was not passed at the instance of speculators, but if there is too much speculation in connection therewith, let Congress repeal the law.

This case has emphasized the well-known fact that United States Grand Juries exercise but little discretion in finding indictments when urged by District Attorneys. Thirteen witnesses were called before the Washington Grand Jury in the Hyde-Benson case, and Hyde subpoenaed them all in the hearing here. None of them knew or professed to know, anything of a conspiracy, nor was there any showing that Hyde and Benson had ever had any partnership beyond the sale of forest reserve lieu land, each contributing his pro rata, and dividing the profits.

The proceedings before Judge Heacock were not in the nature of a trial, but developed into a general investigation of land matters in California. Circumstances, trivial in their nature, and having no possible connection with land matters, were brought out and made to appear as criminal; for instance, Hyde's former clerks were called to testify that they had taken a large number of papers to notaries public who had certified thereto without the personal presence of the signers. Every business man in San Francisco knows that this is a common practice where the signatures and signers are well known to the notaries. Possibly it is irregular, but it is done, nevertheless. It was shown that in 1898 and 1899 Hyde either personally or as President of some corporation, had executed hundreds of deeds and powers of attorney. He probably sent them to his notary as other people do in like cases.

Anonymous letters and the unsupported and unverified statements of blackmailers seem to have been the principal evidence against Hyde. Not one-tenth part of the testimony that was received by Judge Heacock would ever be admitted on a trial, and to drag a man to Washington to stand trial on such evidence seems like persecution instead of honest prosecution.

Some men would rob their mother's grave
And sell the flowers above her;
The men who snivel, and who rave
About the way they love her.
They'd sell the church and pawn the State,
And talk till death delayed them,
About the country being great—
Provided that it paid them.
Such people sneer at weary men
Who seek the pleasant places,
When bonny May comes round again,
And summer shows her graces.
But those who died, if they could speak,
Would very likely say
That they are wise who pleasure seek On Decoration Day.

It is stated on good authority by philosophers that highway robbery, as followed a couple of hundred years ago, was productive of a bold and daring demeanor on the part of the highwayman, but that modern peculation and graft breeds a set of groveling, cowardly scoundrels. However that may be, there does not seem to be any doubt that trades union officialism produces a pretty poor type of man. One Tvietmoe, editor of the paper called "Organized Labor," made a cowardly and despicable attack upon a certain Danforth. The latter, who is nothing like the weight or size of his slanderer, punched him vigorously in the street, and Tvietmoe ran around a wagon praying for the assistance of the passers-by. The trades unionist, who is by the bye, Secretary of the Building Trades Council, and toady for McCarthy, thereupon swore out a warrant for the arrest of his assailant, and when the time came had not the pluck to come and testify. This is the sort of material that pretends to dictate terms and control the movements of modern industry.

Now and again the law against selling lottery tickets is put in force against some poor unfortunate or other who does not have enough influence to escape the clutches of the police. Thus a certain Jones has been sentenced to a fine of one hundred dollars or one hundred days' imprisonment for the sale of lottery tickets in Oakland. The chances are that every blessed official, from the judge who sentenced him to the policeman who arrested him, including the property clerk and the reporter who wrote the matter up, had each a lottery ticket in his inside pocket. The absurdity of the whole matter is evident, not so evident as the resulting contempt into which it brings the law. A parallel case is the law against carrying concealed weapons, yet if you will stand at the rear of a police court and watch the men part their coat-tails to sit down, you will be driven to the conclusion that the police court is as full of weapons as an arsenal.

So the Bohemian Club is to own a permanent home, and to write itself down as one of the institutions. It is very gratifying to note the stability which is beginning to mark that club of erstwhile wanderers. Respectability and successful commercialism are becoming its chief qualities. Trade, solid trade, treads its corridors, and the sign of the big, round dollar is evident on all its belongings. So powerful has money become that a report is current that all the poets in the club are to wear brass buttons and powder their hair, while the artists are to dress in velveteens and serve champagne to the wholesale grocers.

Some people who themselves are never happy unless their nose is well down in the trough, and they are receiving bonuses of all sorts indirectly, are complaining of the cost of the Associated Charities. This organization is one of which the city should be most proud. It commands the services of eight devoted women who receive on the average a stipend of less than four hundred dollars a year. At its head is a university woman of high attainments, who is a sociologist of standing, and a trained specialist. It would be difficult to describe the good effects which have resulted to this community from their efforts in the short time during which the institution has existed; the State Board of Charities and the Juvenile Court, among other things, are due to them. It is the misfortune of a corrupt democracy that even the most unselfish are liable to accusations of graft.

So women's clubs are to be subjected to another disadvantage which a hard hearted and mercenary bank defines as lack of harmony. The California Club determined to erect a new quarters, and being face to face with a problem which talk would not solve, set to work to overcome the difficulties. Plans were made—plans are so easily made; money was to be forthcoming—it is always forthcoming; but in this particular case it performed the hitherto unheard of and utterly ridiculous feat of failing to forthcome. Whereupon there occurred among the ladies various minor differences of opinion, expressed for the most part in a major key, the sound of which penetrated to the ears of the bank directors, who were to have financed the matter. These ungentlemanly gentlemen now refuse to proceed, and the California Club looks likely to be minus a home for some time to come.

John Muir has been on his first trip abroad, and has come back as full of his experiences as a sailor after a first voyage. He must have been a perfect God-send to the newspaper men, for he was good for a column on a slow day. It is a little difficult to detect anything particularly new in his remarks, and I have a fancy that he handed a volume or two of Baedeker to the gentlemen of the press, and that they made their comments from the material furnished. One thing of transcending interest, however, we do learn, and that is that eucalyptus trees do not grow to more than three hundred feet in height. The Scotch mountaineer is sure of that, because he has climbed them. He also hunted kangaroos with a knoberry stick, and has decided that fifteen miles an hour is his best pace at present. It is really very easy to write an interview with John Muir upon the lines that were followed in Saturday's papers.

The Roman Knights or Equites generally managed to get their share of the plunder, and matters of taxation possessed particular fascination for them. Our local Knights of Pythias would seem to be after the same game. The city of Napa has turned the Fourth of July celebration into the hands of this patriotic and humanitarian order, who will import many of their brothers of the craft, and so succeed in making Napa more gloriously hideous than could have been accomplished in the ordinary way. It is to be hoped that the local Knights also handle the local subscriptions to the fund, then the usual questions need not be asked—we shall all know where the money has gone. Next year, Napa should turn the celebration over to the institution which gives her her fame.

Milk that Carries Death Dealing Germs

Some time ago the Overland Monthly called public attention to the question of dairying and dairy industries in San Francisco and adjoining counties. This article was profusely illustrated, and particular attention was called to the dairies of Marin County. It will be remembered that the "Sleepy Hollow Ranch" at San Anselmo, Marin County, was cited as an example of cleanliness, and while no particular mention was made of the various dairies in and around San Francisco, except to say that there were many that were ramshackle affairs, it has since transpired that the Board of Health, under the direction of Dr. Ragan, has discovered a terrible state of affairs.

It is a well established fact that one of the most delicate and most easily infected articles of food is the milk we drink. It therefore behooves those who cater to our wants in the line of lacteal fluid that every possible precaution be taken against contamination and pollution.

The Board finds that nearly all dairies are being run without the slightest attempt being made to protect the consumer from the germs of various diseases easily carried in milk. In some cases it is established that cows are never curried, and that they wallow in mud and filth to a depth of six to eight inches the year around. We happen to know that the report of the Board is mild, and that it might have been far worse. At the same time, the public should be pleased to hear that there is one dairy that is not under the ban.

While there has been a condemnation of nearly all the dairies, including those in the County of Marin that condemnation does not extend to the "Sleepy Hollow Dairy," where the milk is obtained from choice Holstein-Friesian cattle, and where the barns and stables are maintained in a perfect sanitary condition. Indeed, one newspaper of San Francisco has made the remark that there was no more comparison between the stables at this ranch and others than "between a first-class racing stable and an ordinary country barn."

We cannot too strongly commend the work of the Health Department in this particular, and at the same time we feel that it is our duty to point out that here are some people who have not lost their consciences because they happen to be in the milk business.

Here is the report of the Inspector appointed by the Board of Health on the Marin County Dairies:

Report of Dr. Ragan.

Dr. Ragan, in speaking of his trip through the section above San Rafael, said:

"Marin County has the natural facilities to become one of the greatest dairying sections in the Western country if those who conduct the farms could be made to operate their places on modern principles. The topography of the county is exactly suited for dairying. The country is made up of rolling hills that would afford natural drainage if a little money was expended by the dairymen for drains.

"The presence of so much fine spring water gives the men conducting these ranches a chance to keep their places clean if they would only use the water to advantage. The pasturage afforded the stock is the best I have ever seen, and the absence of fogs and winds makes the country very healthful for cattle as well as people. We must educate the men, who conduct these dairies, on hygiene, and those who will not be educated must give up the business."

Dr. Ragan and Dr. Hassler visited seven dairies during the day. Probably the worst of all the places visited was the Miller Ranch, on the Petaluma road. At this ranch 175 cows are milked, and the corrals and buildings were in a frightfully filthy condition. It was declared an example of what a dairy should not be. The cows are milked in the open, and the corral where the milking is done was a mire of filth. It has been six weeks since the last rain in this section of Marin, and an idea of the drainage of the Miller place can be gained when water that fell that long ago is still standing in the yards.

During the milking time the cows are turned into the corral and stand or lie for several hours at a time in the six or eight inches of filth. When the cows are milked, they are as a rule coated with the dirt of the corral, but such a thing as a curry comb is not thought of. The barns and milk houses on this ranch are as correspondingly dirty as the corrals.

Besides the Miller ranch, the dairies of M. T. Freitas, M. Figondes, the Albertes and others were visited. Of these three the Albertes place was the most objectionable. The sheds and premises on this place were in very bad shape, and the methods of handling the milk and the personal condition of the milkers were commented on very strongly by the doctors.

A Refreshing Change.

In sharp contrast to these dairies enumerated above was the place of former Supervisor Richard Hotaling. The Hotaling farm is the only one that has been ranked as "very good" in the eighty odd dairies thus far inspected. Mr. Hotaling's place is known as the "Sleepy Hollow Dairy," and is ranked by the inspectors as the model dairy of this section of the country, and will be used as a standard which the other dairies must emulate. While the equipment of the Hotaling dairy cannot be expected to be installed by the other dairies, still the system of cleanliness and care can be enforced. The notable feature of the Sleepy Hollow Dairy was the extreme cleanliness of the premises, the animals and the men who conduct the place. The cows are curried before each milking, the men wear clean uniforms, and the cow barns are washed out after each milking, and a plentiful supply of lime sprinkled on the floors. The barns are built high, and large windows and ventilators permit the access of plenty of fresh air and sunshine. The feed boxes are cleaned daily and the cooling rooms and can-washing racks are always kept in a state of neatness that surpasses the condition of many kitchens.

Both Dr. Ragan and Dr. Hassler were enthusiastic after leaving the Hotaling farm, and it was with a sigh of regret that they went from this model of a dairy to places of filth and stench conducted by neighboring farmers.

To Some of Our Local Doctors

Mary L. Harper, a cloak and suit saleswoman, formerly with the Golden Rule store, declares that she might have died last Tuesday night because of the refusal of the surgeon at the Park Emergency Hospital to respond to her call for immediate medical attendance.—Daily Paper.

To some of you who bear the name
 Made holy by the Christ that healed
 The poorest; whose dire want and shame
 His blessed mercy ne'er congealed;
 That tender sympathy, that love
 Which claimed the meaneast for His care,
 Turns into loathing hate; above
 Your back is poised the lash. Beware!
 Misnamed Physician, who for money's worth
 Will shirk the labor of your calling grand—
 Will let the infant strangle in its birth,
 The mother die, nor raise a healing hand
 For those who have no gold to pay your hire—
 For those whom Poverty holds by the throat.
 False to your promise, false, you perjured liar!
 Whose honor's value is a paltry groat.
 I see you with hat doffed, your white head bare,
 When wealthy patients greet you in the street,
 Bland accent and a deprecating air,
 To those whose patronage is rich and sweet,
 I see you drive the tortured from your door
 The mother praying for her infant's sake,
 The mother prays in vain, for she is poor,
 And who would work, unless there's gold to make?
 You can hush scandal where the great are smirched,
 No labor is too great where gold's to come,
 And when the homes of luxury are searched
 And evil comes to light, lo, you are dumb.
 But God's sick poor, you drive away with scorn.
 With sneering curses drive the poor away,
 After your revel comes the judgment morn,
 And you were better never born that day.

SOCIETY

Dear Bessie: Wedding bells are commencing to chime again. There were two weddings last Wednesday to usher in the month of June. One was Cora Stinson and Doctor Harold Johnson's, which took place at noon at the Meyerstein home, and was a very quiet affair, with only just the family present at the ceremony, no attendants, and the bride and groom have gone to Boston, which is to be their future home. The other was a button wedding at Berkeley, when Marjorie Erwin and Lieutenant Gilbert Taylor were joined in marriage. Next Wednesday will be the wedding day of Genevieve Huntsman and Harry Williar, and the ceremony will be performed at the home of Mrs. Huntsman on Sutter street. There is some talk of Susie Blanding's wedding going over till September, owing to the unsatisfactory state of her health, but I do not know how true it is; one thing is sure, that when it does come off, Sophie Brownell will officiate as matron-of-honor and be the only one in attendance, too, I believe. Among other September brides will be Isabel Hooper, Kate Selfridge and Edith Findley; at least, that is the programme at present, liable to change, however. Edith Shorbe's engagement to James Steel of Sacramento is one of those announced the past week, and the middle of July is named as the date for the wedding, which will take place at home, but I will tell you more about it later. News comes of the engagement of Mary Hobbs, who was such a favorite while her father was stationed at the Presidio, to Lieutenant Brice, who has just been ordered East, so I dare say the wedding will take place there very soon. "They say" one of the weddings of the winter will be that of Maud Bourne and Frank King, whose engagement will be announced directly she returns from her trip abroad. But you know people dearly love to settle other people's affairs, and half the time there is but a grain of truth in the tales that get afloat.

The Harvey girls will soon be here, and we are quite on the qui vive to have a good look at them. There was a good deal of a discussion indulged in at Kate's little tea the other day, as to whether they would hyphenate their father's name—Downey—with their own, which appears to be deemed the correct thing with so many of them, but the conclusion arrived at was that Mrs. Harvey was too sensible a woman to attempt such a thing. They are already regarded as the buds of the coming season. Laura McKinstry is quite pleased at the prospect of having her brother Charles here part of the summer; he is a Captain now, you know, and will be here on duty for several weeks in August. We have just heard that Fay Kilburne is to be married again to a Miss Maud Metts of Yorkeville, South Carolina. Don't you remember he was in the First Infantry, and stationed at Angel Island for a long time before the Cuban war, and what a pretty wedding it was when he and Lily Miles were married here in '95, and how sorry every one was for Colonel and Mrs. Miles when she died three years ago.

May writes me from Del Monte that the arrival of the Spreckels auto party created quite a sensation last Saturday; there were four machines, with, among others, Grace and Lily, Kate Dillon, Julia and Sam Buckbee. They stopped at the Vendome over-night on the trip down from town. And I have had another letter from Grace, who had still more to tell me of her visit to Ireland. Among other things she was present at the departure of the Duke of Connaught, who is a brother of King Edward, from Ireland, where he has been Commander of the forces, and saw Lady Maxwell—nee Bonyng—present a magnificent bouquet to the Duchess of Connaught, which was "graciously received," in the lingo of court functions. Lady Maxwell, whose husband is Chief of Staff to the Duke, is always noted for her beautiful gowns, and on this occasion appeared in a lovely costume of mauve chiffon cloth.

You never saw any one more pleased than Clemmie Kip Edie at not having to go to the Philippines; Doctor Edie's orders there have been changed, and he will remain on duty in the East for the present, at any rate, and she of course joins him there. Helen Ashton, on the contrary, is quite elated at the prospect of her coming visit to our Island possessions. She was to have made her debut the coming winter, but instead of that, she will accompany her aunt, Nellie Smedburg McIvor when she goes to Manila in the autumn to join Major McIvor, who has been there for some time. Cora Smedburg, who has been in miserable health all winter, is going East to spend the summer and may possibly stay away till next spring.

I hear that the Paul Clagstones—Cora Kirk, you know—are at Santa Barbara, he busily practicing for the polo tournament in August, at Del Monte, and she the picture of blooming happiness; Joe and Cyril Tobin are equally hard at work at Del Monte, where they will stay indefinitely. J. W. Byrne is there, too, but he devotes himself to the pleasures of golf. The Jack Merrills have changed their minds, and instead of Sausalito, will spend the summer at Santa Barbara; the Ashton Potters, who are here just now, are being made quite a fuss over by Mamie's old friends; they are talking of making their home at Santa Barbara. They will be there this summer, anyway, and Mrs. McNutt and Ruth, also. Kate Dillon is off again to Europe, where she will spend the summer, returning again about November, in time for the winter season, which is a satisfaction to hear. The James Follises, Ethel Tompkins and Daisy Van Ness, sailed last Sunday for Tahiti, for the sake of the ocean trip merely, and they will have a pleasant month at sea; the Willie Gwins, who have been East, returned last week, and will pass the time of their daughter's absence at San Rafael.

Mrs. Joe Tobin is never so happy as when she has some of her friends staying with her at her Napa Valley home, and generally keeps it pretty well filled. Alice Hager is with her at present; Ethel is, I believe, going South; the Eugene Murphys are occupying the Dan Murphy cottage at Burlingame, adding another couple to the many delightful people who are at that exclusive settlement this summer. I hear that Ruth and Beth Allen, who are at their home in San Mateo, intend to have a series of house parties during the season; Mrs. Hyde Smith and the girls have selected San Mateo as their summer locale; Elsie Tallant goes with her mother to Yosemite for the month of June, and then to San Rafael for the rest of the season; Marie Voorhies is expected home from the Orient in about ten days; Mary Eyres is visiting the Garnetts in Dixon.

From far Hawaii comes the echo of a brilliant reception and dance given on the Pacific Mail Steamer Mongolia on the occasion of the last visit of that steamer to the bay of Honolulu. The credit for the idea of this very successful social function belongs to Mrs. R. P. Schwerin, wife of the vice-President of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. The big steamer was brilliant with lights from stem to stern. The masts, the main and the hurricane deck were a mass of bunting and color. Huge American and Hawaiian flags intertwined enclosed the stern of the main deck. The Royal Hawaiian Band and the band from the U. S. S. New York, stationed advantageously, discoursed sweet music. Captain Rinder received the guests informally at the head of the gangway, and Mrs. Schwerin, from a central point, received formally a little later on.

THE MILWAUKEE MECHANICS' INSURANCE COMPANY.

The Milwaukee Mechanics' Insurance Company, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, is more than a half century old. Since 1894, when it established its agency on this coast, it has by conservative practices built up a business approaching a quarter of a million dollars in premium income. Its assets amount to $2,920,281.42. It has successfully passed through the great conflagrations of Chicago, Boston, Rochester and Baltimore. The liabilities at Baltimore exceeded $300,000, and these were promptly adjusted and as promptly paid in cash. Since its organization it has paid over $10,000,000 in loss claims.

Recently, the branch office of the Milwaukee Mechanics' and the German Underwriters has been removed to No. 208 Pine street, San Francisco, and this removal was made necessary by its large increase throughout the Pacific Coast,—over 300 agents reporting to this department.

The German Underwriters is a branch of the Milwaukee Mechanics', and is practically part and parcel of the parent company, although it maintains a separate and distinct representation throughout this field.

The management of the Milwaukee Mechanics' and the German Underwriters department has been entrusted to Mr. L. L. Bromwell, since 1894, and he is ably assisted by Captain G. E. Overton, Senior Special Agent; Frank E. Walsh, Special Agent for the Southern end of the field, located at Los Angeles; and Walter E. Bliss, Special Agent for the Northwest, located at Portland, Oregon.

The net surplus of the company, over and above its capital, reserves and every liability, is six times its capital stock, and, therefore, the company is independent of the fire department of its business; the income from its investments being sufficient to pay large dividends. There is no safer policy issued by any company represented on the Pacific Coast than that of the Milwaukee Mechanics' and German Underwriters.

Miss Charlotte F. Williams is making a great reputation among the elect of society by her chic ideas in wedding favors and menu and tally cards. She makes a specialty of decorations for dinners, etc., and her artistic skill and originality is making her a rapidly increasing clientele. She is located at 121 Post street, and may be called the advisor ordinary and extraordinary in social functions.

A pattern hat of exquisite design may be secured at Miss Sweeney's studio at 121 Post Street at the special sale, which is to commence in June and continue through the season. These special designs in millinery are to be sold at half price. Miss Sweeney's early departure for the East is the reason for the sale and it is her purpose to make room for the new stock which she will purchase while she is away.

THE LOOKER-ON

Time was when Memorial Day was an occasion for genuine demonstrations of genuine patriotism; for eulogies of heroes dead and gone, and for instilling in the youth of the land a veneration for those who laid down their lives for the greater glory of the republic. In those days, there were real parades, with all the pomp and circumstance of war; the people assembled upon the sidewalks, and reverently uncovered their heads as grey-haired veterans limped past with tattered ensigns and bullet-torn battle-flags; thousands assembled at the cemeteries and covered the graves of the fallen with California's choicest blossoms; shop keepers put up their shutters; churches held services, and in many ways evidence was given of the desire of the people to honor the memories of our soldiers and sailors. But now—what change has come o'er the spirit of our dream? Has increased prosperity made us sordid? Has the race for wealth so increased personal selfishness that we no longer care for those other things that aid in making a nation great? Has political corruption become so general throughout the country that it is of no consequence to the people whether what should be the high ideals are debased or not? Do they consider the men that have fought and will fight their battles merely so many hired servants for whom they should have no concern, and upon whom they may gaze disinterestedly, as upon so many figures in a passing show? Whatever the cause, certain it is that we of San Francisco have lost that ingenuousness that once distinguished us as a community; our crowds are no longer to be told from any crowd in any large city; our people now suppress any emotions they may have as readily as do any other people; our sense of veneration has been blunted; we have become mere passive spectators, instead of enthusiastic participants in ceremonies that have their basis in patriotism. "Well, we have grown," you say. "We no longer make up a Western village; we are now one of the leading municipalities of the United States." And is a man to become less manly, to forget the teachings of his youth, because he has become rich and powerful? There be greater things than riches.

Such was the trend of my thoughts as I watched the skeleton battalions parade along Van Ness avenue last Monday. The crowd was as thin as the ranks. In five blocks along the avenue only one flag flew from a house-top. Most of the spectators were in gala attire and paused only for the troops to pass, so that they might continue their ways to the ferry, whence to enjoy a picnic. Colonel O'Neill's regiment made a very poor showing. Many of its members may have been in the ranks of the veterans, but even so, the regiment should have done better. The parade was brief, and after the review, the troops and the people hurried away. It would seem almost the better plan to forego a parade on Memorial Day in the future, unless more can be made of it. Fortunately, Memorial Day is a legal holiday, and therefore must be observed to some extent. It is likewise fortunate that the "glorious Fourth" is also a legal holiday. Were it not, no one but the occasional small boy would be so mean as to do it reverence. Truly, we are a great people, but we believe that sufficient for the day is the evil thereof. "Let the dead past bury its dead." We are too busy.

One Robert Minter, who had been using the mails for fraudulent purposes, thought he would beat the game by pleading guilty, and throwing himself upon the mercy of the court. But District Judge De Haven gave him a severe shock when he announced that when he sentenced to imprisonment a man who had pleaded guilty to a crime, his mind was always filled with the calm satisfaction that arises from the knowledge of a duty well performed. "If he knows he is guilty, and admits it," said the Judge, "I have satisfaction in giving him the full penalty of the law." Minter gasped, withdrew his plea, and asked for a jury trial. Judge De Haven's method is commended to other local jurists.

The demands for improvement in the sweeping of the streets are rapidly growing into a thunderous roar of protest against existing conditions. Lack of sprinkling, rather than imperfect sweeping, is responsible for most of the complaints. It is but small benefit to a shop-keeper or a house-holder to have the dirt and dust blown from the piles in the streets into his front door. In Philadelphia, where similar complaints have been made, much has been done to alleviate conditions by requiring the street car companies to run watering cars over their lines so many times a day. Such a plan, if followed here, would result in immediate relief in all the retail districts.

Joaquin Miller is prospecting along a new avenue to fame. Up at "The Heights" he is developing a new brand of chicken which lays hard-boiled eggs. He introduced his fowl and their fruits last Sunday, when he and Count de Parhacs fed a number of pilgrims at the poet's place. The Count is a painter first, a soldier second, and incidentally a traveler. Above all, he claims, he is a good cook. The pilgrims concede the last-named distinction, which, I think, far the greatest. There are thousands of painters, soldiers and travelers—but to cook! that is a gift of the gods. But this is all in passing. The real object of this paragraph is Miller's great discovery—the hard-boiled hen—no, the hard-boiled egg of the before boiled hen. This is the way it happened. On Miller's place is a small geyser—not siphon, but a real, genuine geyser—of boiling water. Now, the poet's hens have become hardened by scurrying over "The Heights," and their integumentaries have become pachylemous in their toughness. Excrescences developed upon their feet, and lumps upon their legs. To cure this affliction, the poet immersed the chickens' legs in the hot geyser water. The effect was wonderful. The corns and things disappeared. The fowl liked the treatment. Whenever they needed a bracer, they stood in the overflow from the boiling geyser. As they became accustomed to the water, they remained longer in it. Now, they sometimes stand ten minutes in the spring. Presently, Miller noticed that his eggs were always hard-boiled. If he cooked them only half a minute they came out hard, though the ordinary hen fruit will not harden inside of four minutes. He watched the hens.

He saw them standing in the geyser. Then he saw them come out and lay. He picked up a fresh-laid egg, and opened it. It was hard-boiled. With the addition of a little salt, half a dozen made a meal—for Miller. The hard-boiled eggs were served to his guests last Sunday. The poet intends writing a "Lay of the Hard-Boiled Egg." He also intends forwarding a bunch of his hens to St. Louis as California products.

The School Directors have done one good thing in raising the salaries of the teachers. Now, if they will give some attention to the improvement of the school buildings, the department and the public will have cause for mutual congratulation. Many of the school buildings are in a disgraceful condition; others are so far gone they should be vacated and torn down. In the outlying districts, children are forced to sit in dirty sheds, such as might, upon compulsion, be found satisfactory to coolies, but whose existence as part of the school department is a shame to the city. The sanitary conditions in many schools are in open and notorious violation of the laws. The Board of Health is not doing its full duty when it permits such buildings to be occupied for any public purpose, particularly when the occupants are children of tender age, and therefore susceptible to the various diseases which have their origin in germs bred under just the conditions to which the pupils are subjected daily. The Grand Jury has denounced the sanitary condition of the schools; the School Directors have denounced it; the people have denounced it, and it is time something radical was done in the way of reform.

"No reading does us any good that is not a pleasure to us," says Richard Le Gallienne. In commenting upon this opinion, Bailey Millard says: "We have seen people with grammar school educations trying to get through 'Paradise Lost,' so that they could say they had read it, and we have seen what a perfectly useless task it was. We must not plod; we must not drudge. We must enjoy what we read, and we must read what we enjoy."

Now, as Millard would say, there is a thought for you. If you have not had more than a grammar school education; if you do not possess a university degree; if you are not of the elect to which, of course, Millard must belong, you may as well give up right now trying to enjoy any of the great works of any of the great poets. Nor is it worth your while to try to enjoy them. They are all beyond your mental grasp; they are deep below your intellectual horizon. If you are aware of your educational limitations you must quit without an endeavor, for if you try to develop, you may fall into plodding, and plodding is drudgery, says Mr. Millard. That gentleman has written in his time much nonsense that has secured publication, but this latest contribution to the thought of the day is so apparently the veriest rot that it is hardly worth discussion. He bases his views upon an entirely wrong hypothesis, to begin with. His idea seems to be that the hall mark of a college is needed before a man's mind can broaden; before his soul can be elevated to an appreciation of higher things; before he can wander with the poets among the higher realms of imagination and enjoy the figures wrought by their fancy, or profit by the teachings of their philosophy. It is sad to think, isn't it, that a man like Abraham Lincoln, whose soul was attuned to music, who possessed the attributes of a great poet—imagery, sadness, force, philosophy—could not appreciate "Paradise Lost" because he did not have even a "grammar school education." I am of a mind that our friend Millard is "merely trying to live the character of an eminently literary personage, without any notable performance."

Roosevelt has written to George Knight and asked him to second the President's nomination at the national convention. "My dear Knight," is the style of the address from the White House. Now, if Hearst should write Tarpey and call him "My dear Tarpey," there would be more truth than poetry in the adjective.

A TRUSTY TIP ON THINGS THEATRICAL.

FISCHER'S—Re-opening. Magnificently staged. "U. S." A big success.
ALCAZAR—"Toll Gate Inn." a pleasing romantic play.
ORPHEUM—A very good vaudeville performance.
COLUMBIA—Maude Adams, a delightful and clever actress—"Little Minister."
GRAND—"Gismonda," a triumph for Ethel Fuller—fine production.
CENTRAL—"A Celebrated Case," surprisingly well played and excellently staged.
TIVOLI—"The Toy Maker," a fair production.
CHUTES—An unusually good theatrical program. Entertaining throughout.

Fischer's Theatre re-opened amid a blaze of glory and music and red lights. The new company is a fine one, and the new contralto, Miss Hull, is a favorite already. The Garrity sisters are phenomenally good dancers, and Miss Aug, the pretty soubrette, is pleasing in the extreme. This young woman is very clever, and seems to possess more than the usual amount of brains allotted to stage young people of her kind. She is sprightly and bright, and there is a certain brilliancy in her lines that comes from herself, and not from the author, for if the truth be told, Brusie has not dialogued to his usual ability in "U. S.," especially so in the first act. This is easily remedied, and by the middle of the week the play now on at the Fisher house will go like the popping of champagne corks, and will sparkle like unto the liquor thereof. "U. S." is in for a long run.

It must be a rare comfort to the Fischer audiences to sit in a house that you know is absolutely safe in case of fire. When I say safe, I am referring, of course, to the matter of exits. The house has been crowded all the week, and if attractive music and a splendid chorus, with a musical playlet that goes with a zip and a bang, is capable of drawing crowds, "U. S." is destined for a long run.

Unfortunately the "Radium Dance" was not shown owing to some break in the operating machinery. The audience did not miss it, however, as they got their money's worth as it was.

Miss Fuller's "Gismonda" is a revelation. She has shown us that she is a most able actress in the various Sardou characters she has given us during the MacDowell engagement, but it remained for the performance of "Gismonda" to fully acquaint us with this actress's range. Perhaps I enjoyed this play more than any other during this engagement, because MacDowell was less in evidence. I will have a chance to note if this may be accepted as a fact when I see him in "A Captain of Navarre."

Robert Elliot's Zaccario in the MacDowell rendition of "Gismonda" at the Grand is deserving of special mention. This characterization of a most villainous type leaves little to be desired. Mr. Elliot certainly reached the author's ideal.

At the Alcazar they are giving us "The Toll Gate Inn." I saw the play after a holiday and a heavy dinner, and it seemed to me that it was not up to the company, or it may be that the company also had heavy dinners. I should say that the dialogue is only fair, and the characters have no chance to show off to any extent. Mr. Osbourne was not in happiest vein, and as the irate old father, the playwright gave him little chance for clever work. Miss Block's "Hester Pennington" was not up to her usual verve.

Miss Starr, as "Dorothy Maitland," was good, and made the most of the author's flat lines. To Durkin and Maher belong the credit of having scored the only possible artistic success in this play. The "Poatchee" of Mr. Durkin was, as far as he allowed it to be, a very fine bit of work, and the old Tinker, Caleb Culver, of Mr. Maher, was a finely executed bit of work.

"His College Chum" at the Orpheum, as done by Ferrar, Cole & Co., is a very clever sketch. The Colby family are musical entertainers, and they are on a par with the very best talent that has ever been on the Orpheum boards. Gaston and Stone are excruciatingly funny in a skit called "A Whiff of the Briny." There are a number of holdovers, inclusive of Marcel's studies, and Burke and La Rue and their "Inky Boys."

Maude Adams gave us a splendid opportunity of judging a clever woman in a very poor play. I could never derive any comfort from "The Little Minister," and disliked it exceedingly, because I had to read it. I was writing book reviews at the time. Maude Adams brought out all there was to the play, but to listen to it twice would drive me to Scotch whiskey and an early demise. Maude Adams is winsome and sweet, and her laughter is like the song of a bird, and I don't want to describe the play, and I will not. I do not like it—it bores me and is decidedly heavy. If you say so, I'll go right on and tell you that Maude Adams is sweet, and a clever, capable, conscientious little woman, and that you ought to see her and hear her, and that if you do not, you will have missed a pleasurable sensation.

"The Toymaker" is drawing good houses at the Tivoli. The changes that have been made, and are being made, seem to please the public, as the attendance at this house is on the increase.

"The Toymaker" is full of catchy little airs, and it is splendidly cast as to scenery and costume.

The Tivoli will open next week with a military comic opera, "Sergeant Kitty." Miss Lillian Sefton will make her debut as the prima donna soprano. The story of "Sergeant Kitty" is a very pretty one. The time is 1830 and the place the village of Montigny. Kitty La Tour has made up her mind to elope with Lieutenant Lucien Valliere, aide-de-camp of General Du Bois, against the wishes of her aunt and guardian, Madame Angelique. Kitty disguises herself as a postilion, and taking the only available conveyance, drives to Montigny. She there marries the Lieutenant, by proxy. There is another side story brought in by the troubles of Henri de Marillac, Lieutenant in the 22d Hussars, of which General Du Bois is General. Henri has contracted a secret marriage, and has introduced his wife as the wife of his friend Lucien. And now you go to the show and see the sequel to this beginning.

The Central sprang a surprise on the public this week in a well-staged and an exceptionally well-played performance. "A Celebrated Case" was given with an unusual regard for the niceties of play-acting, and it is a pleasure to note that the play and the players scored an immediate success. The audience, as usual, demonstrated its approval or disapproval in a frankly boisterous manner that must have swelled the bump of self-esteem of the several ladies and gentlemen on the stage. "A Celebrate! Case," as put on at the Central this week is far and away better than the majority of shows given by pretentious traveling organizations.

Miss Fuller was suffering all week from a terrific cold, and it is hoped this splendid actress will fully recover for "A Captain of Navarre."

The pace set by the management of the new Fischer's will fill that house night after night. The new company is one that need not bid for popularity. Popularity has come to them on the first jump.

Melbourne MacDowell will give us something fine next week in "A Captain of Navarre." It is entirely new to this city, and is sure to draw well. The plot provides for great and constant action. There is a slight resemblance to the action in the play of "Cyrano." Melbourne MacDowell will give us Rene de Padillan, and Miss Ethel Fuller will take the role of the Duchesse d'Armenonville. There are some fine climaxes, and the costuming is said to be something superb.

In "The Peddler" at the Central next week, Herschel Mayall has the chance of his life. The play has never before been seen here, and if what I hear is true, it is a well-arranged and well-written play. There is a very pretty plot and the regular villain, multiplied by several, an unnatural son, a peddler who becomes a baron, a blind girl who is a marvel of sweetness and beauty, and a wise old negro.

"Under Two Flags," Ouida's famous play, dramatized, will be put on at the Alcazar next week, and there is a great deal of curiosity to see what Adele Block will make of "Cigarette." "Under Two Flags" is not as easy a play as the ordinary run at play houses of this kind, as it calls for twenty-eight speaking parts. Messrs. Conness, Hilliard, Maher and Emery, and Misses Starr, Howe and Allen are all cast for strong parts. Durkin will take the part of Bertie Cecil, and his portrayal should enlist for the expatriated Englishman the warm sympathy of the audience. The play has been seen here before, and the novel has been read by the thousands, and the Alcazar will probably show up the "standing room only" sign before the week is out.

It is a fact that Fischer's Theatre met with great success at the opening of the newly improved house on Sunday night last. The theatre is much improved, comfortable and absolutely safe. Secondly, the company as a whole is exceptionally good. The audience gave a royal welcome to all the players. During the second act there were enough floral pieces sent upon the stage to cover the roof of the theatre, and from the enthusiasm of the huge audience, it would seem that "U. S." is likely to run for many weeks.

Ever since it was known that E. H. Sothern was booked at the Columbia Theatre, there has been daily inquiries at the box office of the theatre. The eminent actor will be seen on Monday, June 13th, and interest in the event increases. It is announced that no seats will be put aside until the opening of the sale, so that all may secure equal opportunities for choice of locality.

Russia Insults all Anglo-Saxons.

Russia has fired a civil gun whose vibrations are felt all over the civilized world, and which may increase in intensity until the roar of Japanese artillery becomes a mere echo of them. The St. Petersburg Government has officially declared that the United States and Great Britain are the direct and sole cause of the Russo-Japanese war; that those two Anglo-Saxon nations coveted Manchuria and the dominating influence in China and Korea; that by intrigue and promise they inveigled Japan into assuming the open responsibility of bringing on hostilities, and that in putting forward Japan they have sent out a boom-erang that will eventually return to them as a hostile and dangerous force. This civil gun of Russia is in the form of an official proclamation by the Czar's Minister of Public Instruction, who is also a cabinet minister, in which he ignores all diplomatic inferences, hints and intimates and boldly indicts the United States and England for the crimes of perfidy, treachery, falsehood and hypocrisy—quite enough to justify these nations in promptly declaring war against Russia. But the effect of the insult is likely to be so far reaching and lasting that in time all Russians will look upon the Anglo-Saxons as a race of people that knows only treachery and is inspired by brutal instincts. This Minister of Public Instruction orders that his proclamation shall be a sort of text book in all schools, to the end that Russian children shall be taught from now on to hold the people of the United States and Great Britain in contempt; to regard them as being wholly devoid of honor; to think of them as outcasts, and to avoid intercourse with such human degradation. Of course the proclamation bore the Czar's approval, as all State papers do. The civilized world is asking: "Has defeat of Russian arms in the Far East crazed the Czar and his official family?"

The Czar's Dark Schemes.

But there is method in the Czar's madness. Immediately after the defeat of the Russians at the Yalu river the Russian Government began diplomatic moves to educate public sentiment in Europe to where an open charge of British and American complicity could be safely made, and thus not only create a bitter hatred of Anglo-Saxons and a corresponding degree of sympathy with Russia, but force Germany and France more especially to adopt a still more pro-Russian policy. And this diplomatic treachery has now culminated in the proclamation of the Russian Minister of Public Instruction, which is pretty good evidence that satisfactory assurances have been received from more than one European nation, and France at least does not try to hide her position. In fact, it seems very clear, in the light of developments in the last few days, that the Russian Minister's proclamation was submitted to both France and Germany for their approval, before it was promulgated. If so, France and Germany join Russia in charging the United States and England, two avowedly neutral powers as to the Russo-Japanese war, and supposedly on the most friendly terms with all nations, with having committed the gravest of crimes known to the international moral law—that those Anglo-Saxon nations have been living and acting a monstrous lie and playing double with every nation in the concert of powers, and all this officially proclaimed to be the truth by the Czar of Russia.

More Trouble and Dicker- ing. Verily the past week was busy evolving events and complications all over the world, and diplomatists and statesmen are everywhere in consultation. The Franco-Vatican rupture, and the French threat to abolish the Concordant, is by no means a trifling matter. That in any event France will be shaken to her political and religious centers no one has a doubt, nor that in any event the Vatican will be worse for the struggle is there any question. As is generally known, at the bottom of it all is the determination of the French Government to separate church and State, and place both on the same footing in religious matters as they have in the United States. It costs France about $10,000,000 a year to provide for the Vatican's pay-roll in France. This the Government and all non-Catholics, as well as very many Catholics, want to get rid of on principle. But what the people of liberal thought in France are tired of is the Vatican's influence and intrigue in the political and war establishment concerns of the nation, and a large portion of the Catholic element, aided by the priesthood and all church orders, are equally determined that the Vatican's power and influence shall not be broken. Diplomatic relations have practically been broken off between the Vatican and the French Government, and the Chamber of Deputies is standing by the Government by a large majority. Indeed, the only complaint of the majority is that President Combes does not smash the Concordant, sever all diplomatic relations with the Vatican and place France before the world as a Republic without a State religion, as is the Republic of the United States.

The Progress of the War. During the past week the Japanese came out the victors in every engagement, as seems to be their custom. Eighty-six guns and the complete rout of the Russians were among the spoils of war that fell to the Japanese in their first movement in force upon Port Arthur by land. It cost them 3,500 men to do it, but the price was small if value is measured by advantages in positions. The Japanese land lines are almost within reach of Port Arthur by long-range siege guns, and the date of the fall of that stronghold depends altogether upon whether the Japanese take it by assault or by siege, but the chances are that it will be taken by assault, for at this distance it seems to be worth the lives of a good many thousand Japanese, the more so because with its fall goes the capture or destruction of the Russian naval squadron now bottled up in the harbor. Then the Japanese navy would be free to combine against the Vladivostock stronghold and the Russian squadron at that point, and after finishing that job it could sail away to meet the Baltic squadron on its way to Asiatic waters. The Chinese Chunchesees are openly assisting the Japanese in their march upon Port Arthur. The opportunity to plunder is too great a temptation for Chunchesees to resist, but they are willing to fight hard and loyally for "what they can pick up," with a little Japanese ready cash on the side.

Forty-three towns Destroyed. As indicated what the new policy of the Turks would result in by the News Letter, the soldiers of the Sultan burned forty-three Armenian towns and villages the past week, and most of the inhabitants were massacred. The "small force," as the beastly Sultan puts it, that was sent to do the deadly work, consisted of 12,000 regulars and 16,000 Kurds, the Kurds being rather more brutal and blood-thirsty than Chinese Boxers. But the "powers" seem to be well satisfied with the Sultan's way of conciliating his unhappy Christian subjects.

A Combine to Milk the Public.

The so-called River Convent on will result in another political combine, with a President, Secretary and Executive Committee lined up as deserving competitors for anything in the way of pap that happens to fall from the well-spread banquet table of the "masters." Each and every one of the fraternity will be ready and willing to back any interference with the original plans of their creator. Such a little affair as shifting the bed in which for centuries the surplus waters of the Sierras have been carried to the ocean does not bother this congregated talent of the great Western Slope, who would tackle a proposition to drain the Pacific itself were there subsidies in the offering. It is years since any opportunity has occurred to warrant the formation of a combine, and it may be years again before the mountain storms are severe enough to cause any loss to the owners of the lands which lie along the banks of a stream ordinarily quiet and peaceful as a mill pond. In the years of calm, why should not these farmers, who make large profits upon the tillage of their land, build up their levies and guard against the evil times of storm and flood? What rightful claim have they to demand natural and State subsidies to protect what they can amply afford to protect themselves. A couple of good dredging plants put to work along the Sacramento would do all that is required in the way of providing for all surplus waters, and besides that, quadruple the present valuation of lands which are held at high figures even as it is to-day. But no, they prefer to organize, and by invoking the sentimental sympathies of influential citizens, who are quite ready to give an ear to every tale of woe, get their back to an appeal for the taxation of the public to serve their personal ends and enrich them. Let these land owners work out their own salvation; they are rich enough to do so, and this whine of doleful calamities in the past and dismal possibilities in the future is all for effect.

The British Bilked Again.

What a send-off the Copper King mine of Fresno, and Vercoe, its promoter, got when the news first was promulgated that the great and good Gardiner of South Africa, Parisian and 'Frisco fame, was at its back with the northern iron "Magnet," Sir Christopher Furness as the "angel" of the concern. The story of the Epicurean who was sent out here to manage the company's affairs, and who finally, when discharged, dreamed a dream which placed him in the position of owning, not the mine alone, but a valuable smelter, worth something like $200,000, is ancient history here now. Within the past week this concern, which represents an investment running up into the hundreds of thousands, was put up under the hammer to satisfy the demands of creditors, and the best offer which the liberal souls of Middle California would make was $20,000. Twenty thousand dollars for a smelter which cost a quarter of a million, is almost brand new, with everything modern in the way of machinery, etc., not to mention a mine thrown into the bargain—nothing small about that, when the chance to do the British investor up brown is considered. It reminds one of the old story of the fine 60-stamp mill erected some years ago on the old Josephine mine at Grub Gulch in Fresno County, on which the cost, some $60,000, had hardly been paid when it was sold back to the builder for $5,000. This was another choice investment of the English in California mines. However, the Copper King and its appurtenances did not go for a song upon this occasion, more especially as there is a standing offer of $120,000 for the smelter from the Mountain Copper Company of Shasta County. But that's another story, as Kipling would say.

Money Which Took Wing.

"One by one the roses fade." Another of the get-rich-quick concerns has passed away, with its promoter and manipulator into the shadows, and only the mourners are left to grieve and wonder at the uncertainties of human affairs. Another dream of wealth has vanished, and the castles in the air have melted away like a morning mist in the summer solstice. The Co-operative Mercantile Company, now of the past, was one of those conceptions of the unscrupulous money makers who win the coin of selfish, hungry-eyed individuals itching for rank among a plutocracy vulgar as themselves by making Peter pay Paul. The joint subscription of the two combined dropping while changing hands into the bag of Judas. Judas in this case, overlooking the old maxim of paying Caesar his dues, thereby evading the rightful claims of both Peter and Paul, has fled with the bag. Hence the tears do flow.

The Comstock Market was dull throughout the past week, with prices inclined to shade off. No selling took place to depress the market, and the lack of speculative movement can only be attributed to the unavoidable delay in completing some work on the Comstock which has to be done in order to carry out the programme arranged by the management, which includes ore extraction from the middle mines. The Ophir mine is still turning out a first-class grade of ore and paying its regular monthly dividend.

The financial market in San Francisco can only be described as one continual round of dullness and disappointment. Since the smash-up in what were formerly considered standard stocks, has had a quieting effect upon investors, who are not inclined to buy "gilt-edged securities," which are apt to wilt like a wild-cat at short notice. People lost considerable money here a few months ago in the local market by collapses, and the incident has not yet been mentally obliterated.

NATIONAL BOND AND TRUST COMPANY.

That there is something new under the sun may be gathered through perusal of the literature of the National Bond and Trust Company, 501-505 Mutual Bank Building, which offers interest-bearing bonds upon easy installment payments. There is here an opportunity for absolutely safe and highly remunerative investment, the plan of which is modestly, yet convincingly, set forth in the company's prospectus. By an equitable arrangement, the investor, whether a wage-earner or a capitalist, is assured of substantial gains under easy conditions. The directors and officers are gentlemen of high standing in the business world.

The second and last week of Maude Adams's engagement at the Columbia Theatre begins on Monday night. The first stellar appearance here of the great actress has been the occasion for a display of the immense enthusiasm on the part of the audiences in attendance at the Columbia Theatre during the past week. Miss Adams is not incorrectly hailed as the greatest of American actresses. She has a charm that fairly fascinates one, and her magnetism is given full sway when she plays the role of Lady Babbie.

Richard Walsh and Adele Ligon, accomplished musicians, who play upon every conceivable kind of instrument, will make their first appearance at the Chutes this coming week, presenting their novel sketch, "The Twentieth Century Burglar and the French Soubrette." Jones, Sylvester and Pringle, known as "The Imperials of Minstrelsy," will be heard in the latest songs, and Gus Kiralfy, the German rag-time juggler, will offer an amusing specialty. The Pneumatic Symphony Orchestra, which is a wonder, just installed in the Chutes cafe, discourses delightful music every afternoon and evening.

Truly Shattuck, the California soprano who has achieved a great success in the East, in London and in the Winter Garden, Berlin's great vaudeville theatre, returns to the Orpheum after an absence of nearly four years. She will be heard in songs new and old, and will display some stunning costumes. Gaston and Stone, the "Jolly Jackies," the Powers Brothers, comedy bicyclists, and the Orpheum Motion Pictures, showing many new and amusing moving pictures, including the Brooklyn Handicap, will complete an excellent programme.

THE COBLENTZ ASSAULT.

The San Francisco Examiner has always and consistently encouraged thuggism, and it has always held that a policeman should wink at crime if committed in the name of unionism, or what that delectable sheet is pleased to term "the common people." While many will undoubtedly rejoice at the fact that the Examiner is being given some of its own medicine, yet all right-minded citizens will call loudly for punishment, swift and heavy, for the assailant of Mr. Edmund Coblentz, the Examiner reporter, man-handled and mauled, in Examiner style, by ex-Police Sergeant Wolf.

Mr. Coblentz was simply following out his duty in the premises, and Wolf made a brutal and an unwarranted attack upon the inoffensive reporter. It is about time the newspapers of the country applied the thumb-screws to the powers that punish, and see to it that their reporters are fully protected in the exercise of a legitimate profession. The fact that Coblentz was employed by the conscienceless villains who operate the anarchist official organ should not prevent heavy punishment being visited on the murderous thug who assaulted him.

BUNKER HILL ASSOCIATION.

On Friday, June 17th, 1904, the one hundred and twenty-ninth anniversary of the Battle of Bunker Hill will be celebrated under the auspices of the Bunker Hill Association and other societies, at Los Gatos, Cal., where the societies will be met at the depot by the Board of Trade and various organizations of that place, and where the literary exercises of the day will be held. Special trains will leave San Francisco at Third and Townsend streets at eight-thirty (8:30) o'clock on the excursion, Friday, June 17th.

In the year 1843 the Bunker Hill monument in Boston was completed. The late Mr. William G. Badger, the honored President for over forty years of the Bunker Hill Association of California, was present at the first services in 1825, then only a boy three years old. He was also present at the completion of the monument, then a young man twenty-one years old.

These occasions were undoubtedly the fountain and source of the great fervor and patriotism which inspired the former President of the Bunker Hill Association to organize and maintain it for so many years to commemorate the anniversary all these years by this great event. This year the Sons of the American Revolution, the Sons of Vermont, and the Society of California Pioneers will join with the Bunker Hill Association.

BY THE AUTOGRANK

The Automobile Club of California has held a meeting to receive the resignation of F. A. Hyde as President and a member of the Board of Governors. It was a very busy meeting, and from the amount of work transacted, the indications are that the sport locally will receive new life. R. P. Schwerin was elected for the Presidency, while Thomas Magee, Jr., was taken into the Board of Governors.

This move has greatly strengthened the working force of the club, and will tend to a better condition of affairs, as both of the new officers are noted for their ability to accomplish what they start out to achieve.

At the meeting, the Race and Tours and Runs Committees were abolished, and in their stead an executive committee was created, which will practically control the workings of the club.

The Executive Committee is composed of L. P. Lowe, chairman; Samuel G. Buckbee and Charles C. Moore. These same gentlemen controlled the racing for the last year.

Another committee created was one known as the Membership Committee that will pass on all applications for membership. Secretary F. W. McNear and Thomas Magee, Jr., compose the Committee.

Still another committee created was one designated as the Legal and Legislation Committee. J. D. Spreckels is chairman, while former Governor Budd is his associate. Right here is where the club is taking up the course advocated by the News Letter. It now proposes to go in for an universal law for automobiles throughout the State, and steps will be at once taken to prepare for an active campaign at the coming election. It will be the massing of every one who has good roads at heart, and want to see justice given to the automobile, motor-cycle and the bicycle.

The Executive Committee is working on the endurance run to Los Angeles. Chairman L. P. Lowe next week will send one of his autos over the course.

If the local enthusiasts show any interest in the affair, it will be pulled off the early part of July.

The Los Angeles contingent are in for it to a man, and it only remains for the local end to do its part.

The present plan is to make the run to Los Angeles for points in endurance. Then to spend a day at the Southern city, which will include a parade. Then to start back in company with the Los Angeles automobilist in a sort of inter-club competition. Then a parade on this end.

With all this before the local following of the sport there should be a splendid finish to the season's programme. Following the endurance races comes the Del Monte meet in August and the race meet at Ingle side in September. These, with a series of special events, will make a very complete schedule.

F. J. Johnson, of San Rafael, has been attacked with the automobile fever, and last week purchased one of the new model Cadillacs.

Cadillacs have recently been delivered to Edson Bradbury of this city, Morris Levy of San Francisco, Dr. H. H. Foster of Port Townsend, J. Saheer of Sacramento, and A. L. Griffin of Fresno.

William Koenig left San Francisco Saturday, May 28th, for a run to Los Angeles and back in his Cadillac. It is Mr. Koenig's intention to make the entire round trip in his motor car.

Mr. Hollenbeck, of the Hollenbeck-Bush Planing Co., of Fresno, has just secured from the Mobile Carriage Company a two-cylinder Pierce Arrow touring car. Mr. Hollenbeck looked the cars over very carefully before making his purchase. He has run the car from San Francisco to Fresno, starting on his trip Monday evening.

Mr. George Austin purchased from the Mobile Carriage Company a four-cylinder great Arrow, to be delivered to him at Buffalo, as he spends his time in New York and Los Angeles. Under date of May 10th he wrote the Los Angeles branch as follows: "I have been all through the Pierce factory, from one end to the other, and from what I can observe and learn, they are putting on the market one of the finest, and I believe the best, cars that can be built. Everything is built like a watch, and with the best mechanics that wages can hire; they are so particular that every little thing, even a nut, has got to be ground just so. The shaft is fitted and the bearings scraped. This has got to be within one-thousandth part of an inch, and also turn free."

Mr. George Baldwin of Los Angeles has returned from New York, and tells the Mobile Carriage Company that he is ready to place an order for a four-cylinder Arrow. He looked over the field carefully, and says that the Pierce cars are absolutely unequaled among the American makes.

The Oldsmobile famine in New York was broken last week by the receipt of twelve runabouts and four tonneau touring cars.

Thomas Rose has secured from the Brooklyn Automobile Company the Philadelphia agency for the Haynes-Apperson. He will open a spacious garage for its sale and care in North Broad street. Mr. Rose ordered twenty cars for a starter.

A. P. Shumaker has established a new agency for the Packard machines, and has opened a fine suite of offices in the Park building, Pittsburg, Pa. He has already made a number of good sales and is doing considerable demonstrating.

The Pope Manufacturing Company has established a garage in connection with its automobile salesroom and Crescent bicycle factory at Wells and Schiller streets, Chicago. On account of the factory facilities at hand, a specialty will be made of difficult repair work.

The National Automobile and Manufacturers Co., 134 Golden Gate avenue, are selling good, new, and also slightly used autos at prices which should be ascertained by an early call, as they are unequaled for the value given in this State.

From out of ashes the Cadillac Automobile Co., of Detroit, Mich., has risen almost Phoenix-like. Work on the buildings has been going on with remarkable activity and the company is now turning out machines almost as fast as before the fire, but a little more than five weeks ago. Before the plant was destroyed the company was turning out twenty-five completed machines each day. President Black said yesterday that they are now turning out twenty machines a day in the part of the plant which has been rebuilt and in the various factories which were temporarily leased.

Paris authorities have decided to spend $300,000 in improving dangerous road crossings, the intention being to lessen the number of automobile accidents. Suppose a good roads advocate were to advance such a reason to a collection of American farmers!

Boston is trying to rival St. Louis. It has just opened its park system to automobiles. On the other hand, the South Park commissioners of Chicago have an automobile for official inspection tours—at least that was the reason given for its purchase.

Surprises are coming fast. The results of eliminating trials for the international cup race do not encourage a man to bet much on favorites in the big event.

A good story is going the rounds about Mr. William K. Vanderbilt, who, during his stay in San Francisco, was furnished with a Winton touring car by the Scott-Blakeslee Automobile Livery. Mr. Vanderbilt being a quiet and unassuming young man, the driver of the Winton, not knowing who he was and wishing to please, thought to do so by giving him a fast ride. The chauffeur, therefore, speeded the machine up a little, whereupon he was told by "Wm. K." to drive slower, that there was no need of hurrying so, and that he was a little afraid. Again, during the afternoon, the chauffeur thought to get into Mr. Vanderbilt's good graces by giving him another fast ride. He was again told, by the occupant of the vehicle to go easy. At the termination of the ride, the chauffeur asked the gentleman if he was timid about fast driving. The reply was: "Yes, very much afraid, as I am not accustomed to riding in automobiles." Just then the chauffeur was handed a card which read "William K. Vanderbilt." One can imagine the feelings of the chauffeur just at that moment.

Dr. A. L. Rigdon last week purchased a Stevens-Duryea automobile from the Pioneer Automobile Company. Mr. G. E. Scates, of Watsonville, Maine, also purchased a Stevens-Duryea Automobile.

Three Winton touring cars were sold last week by the Los Angeles branch of Pioneer Automobile Co. Mr. Shore, of Reno, Nevada, is now the possessor of a new 1904 Winton touring car, which he purchased from the Pioneer Automobile Company.

The Pioneer Automobile Company, during the past week sold Oldsmobiles to the following parties, viz.: Con. T. H. Janson, Mr. J. H. Durst of Wheatland, Cal.; M. F. Fountain, of Blue Lake, Cal.; Logan Cycle Co., of Hollister, Cal.; Phillip Penick, of Chico, Cal.; R. M. Beattie, of Lakeport, Cal.; G. C. Schelling, of Santa Rosa, Cal., and P. J. Steiger, of Petaluma, Cal.

Mr. Ferdinand Nelson made a trip around the bay on Sunday in his new 1904 Winton touring car.

A 16-horse power gasoline Locomobile owned by C. A. Fulton Phizemayer, broke the east-bound record from New York to Boston on May 22d. Running time, 8 hours 15 minutes; elapsed time, 10 hours 24 minutes.

To-day, May 23d, R. A. Greene broke his own record between New York and Boston, established on May 13th. Mr. Greene arrived in New York to-day from Boston, his actual running time over the road being 8 hours 50 minutes.

Work has been started on a new garage for Cuyler Lee, Pacific Coast agent for the Cadillac, on Golden Gate avenue, between Hyde and Larkin streets. 12 Model B Cadillacs are on their way here, and should reach San Francisco in about 10 days. INSURANCE

Mr. E. H. Hart, General Agent of the Penn Mutual Life for this State, has been on a visit to the agency convention of his company at Baltimore.

The Maryland Casualty Company secured the liability business of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition. The premium is $75,000. The liability of the company is confined strictly and solely to visitors. That is, the damages for which the Exposition Company might or may be mulcted is that which accrues to visitors through the fault or negligence of the exposition authorities. The president of the insuring company is reported to have figured the premium as follows:

"We took the estimate of the Exposition authorities upon the number of people who would attend the exposition. This was 30,000,000. Then we took the figures of the actual number of people who attended the Chicago Exposition, the Buffalo Exposition and the Paris Exposition. Consideration was then given to the factors that might deter people from going to St. Louis or that would encourage them to go. For example, the South has plenty of money from the high price of cotton, and the attendance from that section will be large. The Pacific Coast is somewhat distracted by preparations for the Lewis and Clark Exposition to be held there, and the attendance from that quarter will be diminished by this cause. The Eastern States have suffered a depression in the security market and a let up in industrial activity, which will deter some people from going to St. Louis. The Middle West is close to the Exposition and is enthusiastic, and there should be a large attendance from this quarter.

"After weighing these influences, we came to the conclusion that there would be 20,000,000 people to visit the Exposition. Then came the question of exposure to accidents. The Exposition avenues are very wide—much wider than at Chicago—owing to the fact that the grounds embrace 1200 acres of land, compared with about 600 at Chicago. The aisles in the buildings are also extra wide. These conditions reduce the hazard. Then, again, we figure that the liability to accident is not so great on the Exposition grounds as it is when people are pursuing their daily vocations. We know from actual figures what the percentage under the latter condition is, and then we allow for the reduced hazard on the Exposition grounds. Working this out on a 10,000 basis, it was an easy task to figure on 20,000,000."

This method of computation looks easy to the non-professional, but to the liability underwriter it is simply staggering.

The terms of the Atlas-Manchester deal, the News Letter learns, are as follows: The Atlas has a subscribed capital of £1,200,000 in 24,000 shares of £50 each on which £5 was paid up, making with £24,000 since added from profits £144,000 paid up, or £6 per share. The Manchester's subscribed capital is £2,000,000 in 100,000 shares of £20 each, on which £2 is paid-up. By the terms of the transfer one Atlas share is given for five Manchester shares. The Atlas issues additional capital of £1,000,000 12 per cent paid up which goes to the Manchester shareholders.

H. S. Mallett, manager of the Manchester, will become assistant manager of the fire branch of the Atlas, with Alfred W. Yee. The vote of the stockholders was taken June 1st, and as before stated in these columns, the deal will be consummated.

The Insurance Commissioner of Wisconsin, Zeno M. Host, has begun libel suit against some three of Milwaukee's dailies. He asks for $50,000 damages from each publication. Here is a tempest in something smaller than the regulation tea pot. Not content with suing the local papers, he has gone to the city of New York and sued some more poor people. All this is on account of the Prudential coming to the front in a sort of manly way (after it had paid thousands of dollars for Host's purported examination) and refusing to pay any more. Looking through a telescope from this distance, it seems that the papers sued need not worry, and that the Prudential will, or rather has, dug Mr. Host's official grave, and will inter him therein, and there will be none to mourn the burial.

Mr. Host is not yet through his trouble with the Equitable, and has only commenced it with the Prudential, but if he can learn, the lesson will be taught him that there is a wide difference between examination and extortion.

The Anglo-American of Toronto, in order to pay its losses in the Toronto Fire, has levied an assessment of 30 per cent on its stockholders. It is too bad that it had American tacked onto its name. It is only the Anglos that assess; the Americans all pay up, or the American companies are paid up.

Joseppa: Sweetest of Tagalog Children

BY PIERRE N. BERINGER

The first time I saw Joseppa, Admiral Dewey had his hand on her head and was saying to the flag lieutenant, "Brumby, what a pretty child!"

The Admiral is neatness personified, and Filipino children, though pretty, are generally dirty. I knew this must be a remarkable Tagalog infant. That the great hero should stop to look at her, that he should touch her, was distinction. The Admiral passed on, and I crossed the little street which runs at right angles to the still narrower lanes, called the Calle Real and the Calle Noveliches.

In Kavite, Joseppa's father and mother own a small cigarette and tobacco shop. Upon the shelves may also be found sardines, pickled tongues and Holland butter, all in tins. At the front of the shop is a large flat basket, containing an immense cocoa-leaf, upon which the native tobacco is spread out to dry. In another and smaller basket is the neatly-wrapped bouilla, or betel-nut. This is chewed by the less cultured of the natives. It is made of cocoa-leaf, betel-nut and slacked lime, and is a substitute for tobacco. Its use is extremely injurious to the teeth. Since the coming of the "Americanos" many of the natives have discarded the bouilla and taken to tobacco-chewing, dropping from one bad habit to another.

Joseppa is a little brown maid who speaks a Spanish patois fluently, a splendid specimen of the cute Tagalog children. She was, at this time, only nine years of age and exceptionally small. I walked into the dark shop, to where she had retreated after the Admiral's departure. On the counter in front of her was a long canoe-shaped vessel of teak-wood. This vessel contained shells, tiny sea-shells, and these were in fifteen or twenty compartments and the game was called solitario. The shells were placed in unequal numbers in the compartments, and in a given number of moves Joseppa had them in the ends of the canoe, an equal number in each.

Going to her, I placed my hand upon her head, just as the Admiral did.

She looked up at me with great trustful black eyes, and then said very solemnly: "Bueno Americano, hermano de los Filipinos."

I was not exactly ready to acknowledge the relationship, but the child insisted with tears that I was a brother to the Insurgent. So to please, I said "Si."

Her eyes twinkled like diamonds, and then to my surprise she said: "Play gem, eh! Seeng?"

It was a long time before I understood that these words were, "Play game, eh! Sing!" And when I finally did comprehend, she was so happy that she could not wait for her father to bring the guitar. She struck an attitude on the greasy old counter and sang a weird, wailing song with a refrain that told of the "Spaniard cooped up in Manila," always ending with "imposible de escapar!" Her voice was high-strung, and when she repeated the impossibility of escape it was wildly triumphant.

We, the Expeditionary Force of the United States, had only been in Kavite a week, but this little native girl, who knew enough of business to tend shop when her father and mother were out, had in her leisure moments, which were not many, learned something of the English language from the soldiers. The pronunciation of the "th" was very difficult for Joseppa. I introduced her to Captains Heath and Whiting, and the best she ever could do with their names was "Captain Each" and "Medico Wide-ink." Captain Whiting was a medical officer, and when I expressed surprise that she should call him "Medico," she pointed to the red-cross brassard and said, "I know!" This was her favorite expression.

The first time I greeted the little family with a word in Tagalog, there was a general shout of joy. I came in one day just as Joseppa was descending from the second-story through a hole in the floor by a bamboo ladder. She turned quickly at hearing my step, and was about to say her customary "Good-mornink," when I shouted out "Ma-gan-dang-a-bipo," which is the morning greeting in Tagalog. She clapped her hands at the risk of falling from the ladder and cried out, "O! Periodiste, I love you! You can speak Tagalog! Father—mother—listen!" Joseppa, for want of a better name, had dubbed me Periodiste (journalist), and even after she knew my name she claimed Periodiste was more distinguished than the one my parents gave me.

Then it was that Joseppa and I exchanged languages, and every day for an hour I would sit on the rough bench outside the door, and that nine-year-old girl would teach me Spanish and Tagalog, and I would teach her English. But that is not right, for Joseppa claims that there is English, and there is American, and that one language is not at all like the other. She says: "Zee English sailor talk fet, greasy kine talk; you spik clean talk wich de leeps; ze English talk wich de froat!" Joseppa was the better student.

One hot day I was leaning against the wall at the arsenal gate, looking at the motley crowd of natives selling fruit and curios to the soldiers, when a little hand crept over mine and an appealing brown face, crowned with a tousled head of jet-black hair, was turned toward me. It was Joseppa. As soon as she knew she was noticed she crossed her hands upon her chest and said, "Come to zee ouze!" This meant that something was wrong at the casa and I was wanted. It's a goodish walk from the arsenal gate to Joseppa's house by the south wall, and the sun was hot. I hailed one of the Karamata, or two-wheeled carts, and motioned my little guide to get in. No, she did not care to ride; so I was compelled to walk. I teased her on the way, but she was not merry. There was something seriously wrong. Before we reached the shop we were walking hand in hand, and the officers and men on the Calle del Arsenal glanced curiously at us as we passed. I didn't care what they might think. This poor little Oriental rag-baby reminded me of other things than war—better things. She reminded me of home, of tender American women and sweet little children far away.

Her father was sitting on the old wooden bench, and as soon as I came in he plunged into the story.

The trouble all came of an American revolver. Some foolish soldier had sold Joseppa's father a pistol. Joseppa's father loaned it to a friend. That friend was Barasso, and Joseppa's father's best friend. Barasso knew nothing of pistols, especially Colt's pistols, and his inquisitiveness led him to extracting the shells. He experienced a difficulty and somehow the barrel turned toward him just at the moment a careless finger touched the trigger. Poor Barasso was shot in the abdomen.

When Joseppa's father got thus far in the tale I inquired if a doctor had been called, and found to my astonishment that nothing had been done in that direction.

"The Filipino doctors were all away in the field, and they thought American medicos were for Americans," he said. Barasso lives in San Roque, outside the old walls.

"Wide-ink," kind Doctor Whiting, worked hard on Barasso, and by nightfall he told me, with one of his good-natured slaps, "It's all right, old man; he'll live, but he's had a close shave!" And then it took me an hour to explain to dear, sympathetic little Joseppa that Barasso's shaving had nothing whatever to do with the case. It was not a time for jokes.

Soon after this Manila was taken, and I found many things to do there that kept me from Kavite. Two months passed away. It was then I received my recall, and I decided to go to Kavite for a farewell visit. I had two important people to see. One was General Anderson, a grim old soldier; the other Joseppa, the sweetest of Tagalog children.

General Anderson's farewells were soon over, and then I hurried to the old shop. On the wall was the same old sign, "Al Contado," which, translated, means "For cash only." The greasy table was there too, and the father and mother were sitting by the little showcase full of fly-specked tins. There was trouble in the house of Alcala. I soon knew. The only child of that house was stricken with typhoid.

I crept up the bamboo ladder, and there, on the floor, on a straw mat, was Joseppa. About the corners of her mouth and around her eyes she was palish green, and she was much emaciated. I knelt by that poor shrunken figure, and I think I cried. Anyway, I know Joseppa cried. Then she said in fairly good English:

"My friend, I know you come. I am going get better. I got zee pisch-book you sen' from Manila. I got zee school-book. I got zee book when I was seek bad, and I get better."

Her father explained that when she seemed so ill that the native physician was almost in despair, a soldier brought the little package from Manila, and from that moment Joseppa began to mend.

Around her neck there was a necklace, and right in the middle, among copper coins from Persia, China, Korea and India, was a fifty-cent piece, white, silver, Americano. It was my last gift to Joseppa.

Just as I was about to leave the convalescent, she pointed to the Goddess of Liberty and said: "I know. George Washington."

I have settled down to the regular humdrum of newspaper life, and from having been an actor in the drama of the Orient, I am now an onlooker, part of the general audience far from the lazy latitudes.

Occasionally an act in the play strikes an affinitive chord among those who are straining mind and vision toward the unborn East—toward the land that came into being so long ago, and which has been lying dormant for centuries—awakened again at the touch of Western civilization. It is a rude awakening.

Among the Tagalogs the notion is current that a sleeper must be aroused by degrees—the name of the loved one is first called in a whisper, then crooned a little louder, the caller increasing the tone of his voice until the sleeper awakens. It is current in the tribe that sudden and loud calls bring on heart disease.

There is a shot in the jungle, a cry and then a silence, and it seems as though Nature herself had stopped, and then from the audience in the West comes the echo. A mother strains her eye and mind no more, a girl has lost her sweetheart, a father his son and a boy his brother. They faint and fall, and in the rush are trampled on, the cry is lost and they are carried away to where they may bind up their wounds to bleed anew.

The shock came to me. While the fleet bombarded the little town of San Roque, an insurgent nest, the troops advanced over the Kavite causeway and fired by volleys into the straw thatches. The Tagalogs fled in all directions. Then the village was fired—the straw burned like tinder—and the soldiers rested on their arms while the city burned. Suddenly their attention was arrested by the figure of a little girl darting toward one of the huts. She entered the door just as the roof crumbled inward. Fifty men forgot discipline and rushed forward. An Irish volunteer sergeant in the Heavies, then stationed at Kavite, carried the little form out of the blackened embers and laid it on the grass. Tightly to her breast she held a picture-book and in her hand an American coin. She smiled sweetly in Honaine's face and said:

"Buenos Americanos, hermanos de los Filipinos."

The news reached me by letter, and it seemed as sudden as a cable message, and I gulped down a hard lump.

HE WAS A CHRISTIAN SCIENTIST.

Dr. Russell H. Cool had a brand-new experience last week during one of the sessions of the State Board of Dental Examiners, of which he is a member. A man who has been a practicing dentist in Oakland, but who, under the new law had to be properly certificated by the Board or take in his shingle, came up for examination. He was answering one question after another quite satisfactorily, when Dr. Cool asked him about a specific medicine that would have to be used under given conditions. The man replied that he would give no medicine, that he never gave any.

"Do I understand you to say that you never give medicine?" queried Dr. Cool.

"Yes; I am a Christian Scientist," replied the applicant with an air of finality, and then he added: "There is no such thing as pain; consequently there is no need of a cure for it."

Dr. Cool pressed the man for an explanation of his reason for filling teeth, because by the rule that there was no pain, there should be no decay.

The would-be practitioner explained that he used fillings as a temporary matter because under Christian Science treatment, the growth of good dentine forced the filling out. He said that he had many cases in his practice of this. In fact it was quite common.

Dr. Cool was speechless after this statement. The applicant's case is still under consideration.

THE ITALIAN-AMERICAN BANK.

Prince Luigi of Savoy must have had a very pleasant recollection of his visit in San Francisco, for, in conversation with one of the leading Italian citizens of Honolulu, he spoke of the broad democracy and the delightful hospitality that prevailed at the reception on the occasion of the opening of the Italian-American Bank in this city.

Mr. Andrea Sbarboro, so well known as an enterprising citizen, is the President of the Italian-American Bank, and it is due to his and his associates' efforts that the bank is finally housed in the magnificent quarters at Montgomery and Sacramento streets. The Italian-American colony is known for its thrift and its enterprise, and it is to be highly complimented in the possession of such a representative institution as the Italian-American Bank.

FORTHCOMING ART EXHIBIT.

Mr. Arthur W. Best, the well-known San Francisco artist, has returned from a four weeks' sketching tour of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado. Mr. Best was accompanied by Thomas Moran, the celebrated New York painter, and together they traveled over that marvelous region. Mr. Best discovered that the real picturesqueness of the scene, and the temple, palace, towns and other striking architectural designs are the work of storms and sunshine during the ages, and that these forces had much to do with the wonderful colorings. Mr. Best returned with thirty sketches in oil, which he is now busily engaged in transferring to canvas of large dimensions. In the near future Mr. Best will place his pictures on exhibition, when the public will have an opportunity to see the most graphic and natural description in colors of this awe-inspiring combination of results of nature in convulsion.

What "Reuben" of San Francisco Saw in New York

New York is a big town. It is somewhat larger than San Francisco, although you could not tell this by looking at it. It is a little taller than San Francisco, but not so broad across the chest. They have horse races here, also, but some people say the epidemic will soon be stamped out. San Francisco, as you know, had this same disease last winter, but they let it run its course, the Futurity Course, I think, and it had gotten completely over it when I left there.

It is different in New York, however. A new specialist named Jerome is treating it, and some say the cure is worse than the disease. His first assistant surgeon, named McAdoo, is cutting all the telephone and telegraph wires which go to make up the racing organism. He says he is sacrificing these wires to keep others from being bled. The disease has been so prevalent that he has been able to capture some of the germs, and these have been bottled up in the local cemetery—they call it the tombs here.

There are also a number of racetracks in this vicinity, but more jockeys than horses. There was some talk of putting two jockeys on each horse so as to give them all a chance, but I hardly think the plan will materialize, though I believe it a good one. You would not believe that a town of this size could hold so many jockeys, but one trip to the track will serve to convince the most skeptical.

The moment you poke your head through the gate of admission, some one, in a friendly sort of fashion, will take you by the arm and tell you of a horse which he is to ride being a "sure winner." Indeed, these jockeys seem to be found in relays from the gate to the paddock, and from the paddock to the grandstand, and when one drops your arm another grasps it. The next one will probably tell you a tale of how Easy Money "worked." There is a marked difference between the San Francisco and the New York jockeys. The former is satisfied in taking all that is in sight, while the latter will take all in sight and a whole lot you don't see. The irrigation plant may be the latest botanical graft in California, but the jockey is the native "grafter" in New York.

—Reuben.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS SHOULD BE ENCOURAGED.

The country's hope is in the Industrial School. Colonel Auchmutty has demonstrated the benefit to accrue to the community through similar institutions. In his school in New York, sixty-seven trades are taught, and the school is heavily endowed. We have enough wealthy men in California having the general good of the industrial community at heart to establish two such schools in San Francisco. The unions are busily engaged putting restrictive walls around all industries, and it is high time the State took a hand to tear down these restrictions with the help of our philanthropists. We need several industrial establishments where the instruction is to be practically free. It is the salvation of the nation.

—You will appear to be always wearing new clothing if you have your suits cleaned and pressed regularly by Spaulding's Cleaning and Dyeing Works, 127 Stockton street. Besides, it makes the clothing last twice as long. They also clean gloves, neckties, ribbons, laces, curtains, draperies and all such articles quickly and thoroughly. Try them once, and you will be satisfied.

—You'll never regret a visit to Zinkand's, which is the best of San Francisco's after-the-theatre resorts. It serves the most tempting dishes, the best liquors, inspiring music, and is patronized by the smart set.

The Political Situation

The announcement is made that the present Secretary of Commerce and Labor, George C. Cortelyou, is to be the chairman of the Republican National Committee, and therefore ex-officio manager of the campaign for the President's party this year. The appointment is remarkably popular, even on the part of the opposition, and the Brooklyn Eagle, Springfield Republican and New York Evening Post, all rabid Democratic organs, declare that it means a clean, decent campaign free from all financial scandals. Cortelyou certainly has had a most remarkable career. Only a few years ago he entered the Civil Service as a clerk through a civil service examination, as a stenographer. He had no "push" or "pull," and was known simply as one of a dozen applicants for examination who passed extremely well. One day an extra clerk was needed at the Executive Mansion, and when the President, Cleveland at the time, asked one of his secretaries to send him a good man, the secretary sent Cortelyou, whom he had found always ready and willing to work. Cleveland found Cortelyou a good stenographer, and attached him permanently to the White House force. McKinley found him there, and was so much pleased with him that he made him one of the assistant secretaries, and when Porter resigned, gave him the chief place. Roosevelt retained him, and made him a Cabinet officer, and now he is to manage the campaign, and if Roosevelt is re-elected, Cortelyou takes Payne's place as Postmaster-General, one of the most important places in the Cabinet. The curious thing about it all is that no one seems to know what Cortelyou's politics were. It is a question whether he was a Republican when Cleveland appointed him, or whether he was a Democrat when McKinley retained him. It is said he voted with the Democrats before 1896, but in the particular of talking about his early political history, Cortelyou seems to be as inclined to be silent as Parker about his.

As chairman of the National Committee Cortelyou will have two assistant secretaries, one Governor Murphy of New Jersey, who will be in charge of the Eastern quarters at New York, and the other G. W. Blythe of Iowa, who will be in charge of the Western headquarters at Chicago. Treasurer Biiss will continue to serve in that capacity, so that the finances will be looked after as of yore. In this connection it is said that while the Republicans will not have as much money as the Democrats, if either Hearst or Parker is nominated, they have been promised some good subscriptions.

Aside from the general interest in the management of the campaign, Californians have a special interest in the selection of Cortelyou as chairman of the National Committee, because it leaves a vacancy in the Cabinet which is more than likely to be filled by a man from California. The President, in fact, is understood to have intimated to Congressman Metcalf that he would like to see him put his legs under the cabinet table in the place of Cortelyou. Metcalf has, it is understood, expressed his willingness to accept the appointment, and the question of who will succeed the popular Representative from the Third District is already a matter of discussion. There are three counties in the district, Alameda, Contra Costa and Solano, although, of course, Alameda outweighs the other two. Frank Devlin, formerly District Attorney of Solano County, is a candidate, and would no doubt poll a big vote, as he lives in Vallejo and would get the Mare Island vote to a man. But Contra Costa has a candidate also in the person of State Senator Belshaw, who is anxious to transfer his ability from State to national politics; while Alameda has an excellent candidate in the person of Frank A. Leach, Superintendent of the Mint. Leach would seem to have the advantages of his two rivals combined, as he formerly published a paper (the Chronicle) at Vallejo, and is well known there, and would have the confidence of the men in the Government Navy Yard. He was also owner and editor of the Oakland Enquirer, so that the people of both Alameda and Contra Costa counties know him well. Besides, there is a decided objection to Senator Belshaw, which he is encountering even in his efforts to secure a re-nomination to the Senate, and that is his opposition to the labor unions, which, of course, makes him weak in localities where they are as strong as they are in Contra Costa and Alameda Counties. In view of all these facts, and the further fact that Alameda County would rally to his support, undoubtedly with enthusiasm, Leach would seem to be the most available candidate for the place which Metcalf will leave vacant. The double election would take place at the same time in November, for the balance of the present term, and for the new term, so that if Metcalf gets his appointment and resigns, his successor will not have to wait over a year before he gets the seat to Congress to which he is elected.

Oregon elects her Congressmen and State officers on June 6th, which will be the first gun of the Presidential campaign. It will also, I understand, be the last election she will have in June, as under a new law the elections in future will occur in November. The June election was arranged in the days when there were no railroads and telegraphs, and like the absurd system of electing Congressmen more than a year before they take their seats, is a relic of a condition that no longer exists. When the Congressional elections were placed in June in Oregon, the Congressman-elect had to go to Washington by way of Panama, and it took months to find out who was elected, and half a year more for the successful candidate to get to Congress.

Congressman Livernash is coming home to look after his political fences. The opposition that confronts him is not simply that of the Republicans, which, of course, he must expect, but the Democrats who are opposed to Hearst's candidacy for the Presidency are equally opposed to Livernash's candidacy for Congress, and they will fight one as hard as the other. In this connection Ed. Leake of the Woodland Democrat, has an editorial discussing Livernash, in the course of which he says: "For once in his life Mr. Hearst showed some political sagacity when he decided to keep Livernash in New York lest he might break into the Santa Cruz Convention. His appearance in that body would have been like flaunting a red flag in the face of a mad bull. Many of the delegates hailing from the Sacramento Valley, who love Theodore Bell and who appreciate the great work he has done for the State, but who for reasons that no human being can explain on a plausible theory, were indifferent and inclined to give Mr. Hearst a passive support, would have been inspired by the presence of Livernash to such reprisals against the whole Examiner outfit as would have insured Mr. Hearst's defeat." Another point that is not to be overlooked is the question whether the labor unions have the courage of their convictions and will stand by their avowed principles. Livernash openly ignored their wishes and desires, and did his best to defeat one of the measures they profess to be most interested in. Indeed, his quarrel with Bell was over the efforts of the Congressman from the Second to have a naval vessel built at Mare Island, the thing which the unions have been clamoring for, and advocating for years. We shall see whether they will cheer and applaud the man who did his best to defeat that plank in their platform. It can be truthfully said, and the Congressional records will show it, that of all the members of Congress the only two avowed members representing labor, Livernash and Wynn, did the least for the cause of labor, just as the labor members from this city at Sacramento in the last Legislature did the least, and were the weakest friends of labor on the floor. Walsh of Alameda was worth to unionism all the Murphys, et al., on the Assembly floor, and Harry Bunkers, the one union labor Senator, was a screaming farce as an advocate of any labor measure. So in Congress, Gillette, Bell and MacLachlan were as much superior and valuable to labor as compared to Livernash and Bell, as a twenty-dollar gold piece was superior to a copper cent, yet both Wynn and his master are asking the labor vote to send them back to Washington to fight the interests of the farmers of Mendocino County, the mechanics of Vallejo and the wage earners of the whole State. They should be turned down so emphatically and forcibly that for all time to come they will stay politically dead.

The arrangements for the Republican delegates to go to Chicago are now completed, and they will have a fine special train paid for by themselves, a fine reception room at the Auditorium, paid for by themselves, very handsome badges, designed by Ruef, but paid for by themselves, and will take along a lot of California products sent by Californians to help entertain their visitors when they reach the Windy City.

The Democrats are to have the most gorgeous train ever seen on rails, paid for by Hearst, rooms, meals and badges paid for by Hearst; they will be quartered at the Planter's, rooms and meals paid for by Hearst; will take a band with them, paid for by Hearst, and will come home in the same style—if Hearst be nominated.

JOHN PARTRIDGE

MY SWEETHEART.

By H B S.

She is little and petite,
But she's sweet.
Precious jewels oft are small,
After all.
"Man wants little here below,"
And I trow,
"Does not want that little long."
Is't not so?
She can make me feel, though tall,
Very small.
She is big enough, if short,
Just to court,
Just to hold in my embrace;
Just to place
On her tiny lips a kiss,
That were bliss.
She is big enough for me,
For, you see,
She just reaches, with her art,
To my heart.

DEFORMED.

By A. L. Bunner in Century

All you who nurture Love in the full day,
Proud of his growing strength, his pretty play,
What do you know of Love like those who see
The birth of Love, with fear and misery?
Cramped, checked, confined, it grows a crippled thing,
Its birth an agony, its strength a sting.
Like some poor mother whose more perfect son
Needs not her love like the deformed one,
Defiantly she clasps it to her breast
And loves the poor, distorted thing the best.

ENLIGHTENMENT.

By Charlotte Becker in Woman's Home Companion

I was so dull, the whole wide earth spread gray,
And all the birds were quiet, and the Spring
Was meaningless, and Time was overlong—
Until a little god paused on his way
Across the world, to beg companioning,
And through the silence rang a wondrous song!
Now I am wise—and every barren place
Breaks into bloom; I hear the birds rejoice,
And Spring speaks whispered words to me apart,
For I have seen the comfort of Love's face,
And I have known the music of Love's voice,
And I have felt the beating of Love's heart!

WAIT.

By John Vance Cheney in Century

Night comes hither star by star,
With dim growing comes the day;
So quiet may
Linger, long upon the way.

Patience! wait! the bliss will come,
As the bird comes, with smooth breast
To round the nest
In the branches of green rest.

A Disappointed Pirate Complains

Here is my ship, where the crew forlorn,
 And they smell like a coarse-fed harpey,
 Go swabbing the decks from night till morn,
 At the orders of Michael Tarpey.
 But for me, who own the wretched thing,
 There's nothing to do or say,
 For Tarpey yells with vim and swing
 His one commandment: "Pay!"

And so I pay—but it makes no odds
 Whate'er may be my wishes,
 Whether I lift my hands to the Gods
 Or call upon the fishes.
 For the leaky craft is settling fast—
 So fast that naught can save her.
 The honest men are tied to the mast,
 And the pirates will scuttle and stave her.

Just one sail left, and that in shreds,
 Where the wind goes screaming through it,
 And the landsmen laugh at the flapping threads.
 And solemnly say: "We knew it."
 We have no course, we have no port—
 Our compass? Lawrence stole it.
 While Tarpey, who bragged we could take a fort,
 Took the bell, and we cannot toll it.

So I hire myself for a pirate cheap
 Wherever I find the payment,
 But my pirate crew are wise and deep,
 And they collar the food and the raiment.
 While I, a tattered human wreck,
 Am tired of the pirate boasting,
 And I'll finish my days by swabbing the deck
 Of the craft which is known as coasting.

Colorado's Crimson Crown

When the Maine was blown up in Havana Harbor the horror of it held a nation's heart still, and as soon as the full extent of the calamity was realized, there arose a cry for vengeance.

The blowing up of the Maine happened in a friendly nation's harbor. There was some excuse for the action of the hot-heads who blew up this ship.

What shall we say of the events of the past few days in Colorado? A nation's heart has stopped its beat for horror. This time the crime is in our own house, not in the house of a friend.

Will the nation cry for vengeance? Will it wait until the spattered blood and brain is dry on the railroad platform, where those hapless victims lost their lives to the insensate fury of organized labor?

The issue is sharply drawn. The Supreme Court of Colorado has rendered its decision giving the Governor full power to act, and it is high time that his leniency stop.

The crowning insult to the intelligence and the patriotism of the people of the United States comes in a resolution by the organization responsible for the dastardly outrage at Cripple Creek that it will investigate and report on the acts of its instructed agents.

There is a long score piling up against the labor agitators who lead these foreigners. The ditching of the engine in '94 at Sacramento is not forgotten. The blowing up of the "Independence Mine" in Colorado is not forgotten.

These crimes were all committed by the same element, an element that has changed its name! It is not now called the "Central Anarchist Group." It is called the "Western Federation of Miners."

The duty of the sane and right-minded citizen is plain. He owes allegiance to his country and his country's flag only. It is time these foreign anarchists be punished. It is high time the Mitchells, the Demilliss, the Mother Joneses be gibbeted as high as Haman.

The Western Federation is busy in our mountain mining districts establishing itself in California, and the blight is already felt. Mines are shutting down and mining interests are stagnant.

Between these criminal bands there is a connecting link. That connecting link is the Hearst newspapers. This it is that has fomented most of this discord, and it is hired men and their unbridled and revolutionary utterances that have unleashed the organized criminals that infest our fair land.

It is Hearst who published in his vile sheets the telegram that was the incentive to the murder of McKinley. On February 4th, 1900, the Washington correspondent of the Hearst villainies wrote as follows:

"The bullet that pierced Goebel's chest
Cannot be found in all the West.
Good reason. It is speeding here
To stretch McKinley on his bier."

It was the Brisbane type of hired man who wrote these fearful lines, and it was the Cripple Creek type of fanatic the damned doggerel fired to insanity and the subsequent killing of the nation's executive. McKinley was martyred, Czolgoz expiated his crime, but the arch-criminal lives and aspires to fill the chair once occupied by his victim. The Democratic Convention is to meet at St. Louis in the very near future, and it is important that it refuse to recognize the representative of anarchy and revolution, lust and license, and the News Letter respectfully submits the above to the consideration of the convention.

THE CASE OF CAESAR YOUNG.

An enterprising minister would find in the life and death of Caesar Young, the bookmaker and race track gambler, much material for a strong sermon on the demoralization attendant upon the race track, and the immoralities practiced by its votaries. Young was a typical race track man. He lived and had his being in the atmosphere that envelops the betting ring. His sole purpose in life was to obtain from the dupes that follow the races, by the most expedient methods, all the money they could earn, beg, borrow or steal to bet upon the horses. His claim to distinction among the people of his class was that he was more daring than most of them, and that he could win or lose a fortune without disturbing the regular tenor of his way. He was married to a beautiful woman, who loved him devotedly, but he deserted her repeatedly to consort with one of the many public characters always to be found at the race track, like so many harpies, ever awaiting their prey. He dissipated heavily and frequently, and long ago he cast aside all those conventionalities by the maintenance of which respectable people learn to recognize a man of honor. So fast was the pace he set, so regardless was he of public opinion, that his conduct caused surprise even among the other gamblers, who were as devoid of morality as he, but who possessed less boldness in their wickedness. The manner of his death was a natural consequence of the life he led. While in a cab in New York, on his way to meet his wife, who had planned to take him to Europe in the hope of reclaiming him, and who was awaiting him at the dock, Young was shot to death. Beside him, when he died, was the guilty companion of his immoralities.

Among the gamblers he was considered a successful man. "The luck of Caesar Young" became a proverb. He accumulated a fortune, but what of the man himself? What of his immoral past? Can no lesson be learned here? Does it mean nothing that at the time of his greatest material success, at the time when he flaunted most boldly the laws of both God and man, at the very moment when, beside him sat the Jezebel for whom he had forgotten the lessons of his youth and the duty of his manhood—that at such a time, when he was envied by scores of other gamblers, he should be stricken down; that he should go to a dishonored grave?

Caesar Young led the life followed by all men who find a livelihood in fleecing the public at the race track. They are a class apart from the respectable portion of the community. With them, honor is a by-word; the only honor they know is that honor known among thieves. If proof were needed of the evil influences of the race track, it is given by the life and death of Young. He was a representative man among his fellows. What he did the others copied. They were less than he only in the notoriety of their misdeeds. Their ambition was to emulate him in all things. Such men and the business they follow make for evil among the people. To their works may be traced more embezzlements, more wrecked homes, more ruined lives, more crimes, more suicides, than to any other cause known to modern life. The people of this city will admit the truth of this statement without argument. They have learned its truth at bitter cost. It remains for them to say whether they shall longer permit the class of which Young was a representative to continue the despoilation of the youth of the community.

BURDENED BY THE BUILDERS' UNIONS.

San Francisco is burdened with the effects of causes that were born of the spirit of robbery. At first it was a cunningly devised scheme to give undue profit to a few at the expense of the many, but the scheme was not long in evolving into a wicked conspiracy to commit robbery by wholesale and oblige the entire community to stand and deliver. The Building Trades by their Council conceived the plan, and certain building contractors quickly became willing co-partners.

The beginnings of the conspiracy were in the act of the Building Trades Council resolving itself into a close corporation or trust to control the building trades supply market. And in order to maintain its assumed power, the Council resolved that the right to participate in the work of erecting new and the remodeling of old buildings belonged exclusively and unqualifiedly to members of building trades unions under the direction of the Building Trades Council. The next step was to restrict membership in the several building trades unions to the then existing roll, and under no circumstances should the numerical strength of any trades union be increased. Following that came an edict which denied the right of a fellow building trades union member from beyond the corporation limits of the bay counties to accept employment on any building. The trust thus being fortified at all points against competition, orders were given that the wage schedule be advanced two and three times over; that eight instead of ten hours should be the outside limit for a day's work, and that if circumstances obliged more hours the compensation should be one-third more.

The arguments that converted the contractors were the logic of brutal selfishness and greed. One of the Council's propositions was that like the Building Trades Council the Contractors' Association should be a close corporation, restricting its membership to narrow limits. When all this was accomplished by the contractors, the Council would recognize the Contractors Association as being the only employers of building tradesmen from whom members of unions could accept work; moreover, the Council would not recognize the right of a non-association builder to make contracts, and has enforced its authority by withholding labor from such "scab" contractors.

The advance in wages is simply a mathematical matter of addition, for which the property owners and not the contractors would provide.

But what effects are accruing to the general public of San Francisco from this labor union-building contractor trust? Thousands know the answer from dire experience. Rents have increased on an average of about 33 1-3 per cent in the residence districts, and from 25 per cent to 100 per cent for business houses. The rents of dealers in family supplies being enormously advanced, it naturally follows that the prices of their goods and wares are made to conform to their increased rentals. The whole community must meet this increase regardless of salary, and fully 95 per cent of wage earners receive only about half the wage of a bricklayer.

Maintenance of the home in San Francisco has increased for an average family about $25 a month, with no increase in income, except for the members of the iniquitous conspiracy. And the News Letter has discovered what seems to be the only effective remedy, and it is this: Let contractors, with the aid of the Citizens' Alliance, who are not in the combine bring outside building tradesmen to San Francisco and put them to work in open competition to the trust, and then let the public see to it that they and their workmen are protected to the uttermost. Perhaps the trust might offer resistance. So much the better, for such a move would expedite its death. But the question is, how long are renters of homes and buyers of family supplies going to contribute $25 a month extra to maintain a few trades unionists at wages ranging from $6 to $10 a day, while their own income has not increased a penny?

AN INGRATE SON.

Aged Joseph Figel has enjoyed for many years the high esteem of his personal and business acquaintances. Once more he has, also, their sympathy. Seven years ago he undertook the difficult task of clearing away the charges of murder, forgery and embezzlement which stood on the books of the City Prison against his son, Theodore A. Figel. He succeeded, but it cost him all that he had earned and saved in nearly half a century. It was believed by many that there was every evidence that young Figel was guilty—that "playing the races" had made him first a thief, then a forger and then a murderer.

By the time the son was free, it is said, the father then past seventy years of age, was financially ruined. He was forced to go back into business in order to support his family. When nobody else would employ the son over whom hung—and still hangs—a cloud of suspicion which no jury's verdict could dispel, it was the father who made a place for him, and, retiring recently at nearly eighty years of age, ultimately gave him the business. And now the same Theodore Figel is accused of defrauding a city bank of about $1,000. He is missing and is hunted by the police.

Morally, this young Figel may have been always a degenerate, by nature an ingrate and without honor or principle, but it was the race track that landed him in the felon's dock; it was the race track that cost him his standing in the community where the name of Figel was synonymous with probity and uprightness; it was the race track that, through him, beggared his poor old father; it is the race track, one may be sure, that has again brought him within the reach of the law. At the same time, his record is full of evidence to prove the rottenness of our criminal courts, in which it is often useless to invoke the law against the criminal with money or a "pull." In Figel's case, it is believed by many that it was his father's fortune against a clear, convincing case of circumstantial proof, and that the money won.

JURY BRIBING.

Jury-bribing scandals are exploding so often in the courts of San Francisco, and are so seldom followed by the punishment of anybody that they have ceased to be regarded as sensations. They point out, however, so many defects in the system and argue so loud a state of public morals, as to raise anew grave doubts concerning the merits of that Anglo-Saxon institution—the right of every man accused to trial by his peers. Lately we had in the Botkin case a flash-in-the-pan charge of attempted embracery, and still more recently there has come a much more direct charge of the same kind—this time a specific accusation against a person plainly identified. To make the cost more aggravated, the man on whom black suspicion rests is an officer of the court whose justice was sought to be tampered with. Moreover, it was an affair of the Chinese quarter—an affair of murder done cold-bloodedly for hire—and there was and is no lack of money in the case to procure the commission of any degree of crime. It is significant that the bail of the alleged briber, $5,000, was put up promptly in cash.

It is not the News Letter's practice to prejudice, but in this latest scandal there are many facts which point to the guilt of the lawyer who is accused. The man who makes the charge accompanied it with the return into court of the money which, he declared, was thrust into his pocket. The lawyer admitted meeting and talking to the juror at the time and place mentioned, and to off-set the charge had only a vague, and stammering denial. Fortunately for the public, this scandal has come in the department of the Superior Court presided over by William P. Lawlor, than whom no more upright, clean-handed, clean-minded man ever graced the bench. It is likely that he will get to the bottom of this damnable business, and it is to be hoped that he will make such an example of the offender, if he be convicted, as will drive the ring of case-fixers and jury-bribers into courts that do not enjoy the confidence and esteem of the people. There are a few such departments of the Superior Court, and to these the tamperers with justice generally restrict their operations, but in this affair the money in sight was so plentiful, the life of a Chinese of consequence being at stake, that the crooks were tempted to take a long chance by going into a court honestly and vigilantly officered.

There is need of radical reform in the method of drawing jurors, so as to keep off the panels men of known or suspected affiliation with the evil elements of the community. There is also need, if the jury system is to stand, of a revision of the code of morals applying to the high function of men called to pass upon the lives, liberties and estates of their fellows. Most of all, there is need at this time of a conviction of some jury briber, and his speedy punishment, with a term in prison as long as the penal code allows. The case in Judge Lawlor's court seems to be an excellent one for filling this need.

COLLEGE MEN AS MINISTERS.

The churches are calling for more college men to enter the pulpit. At all the conferences of various evangelical churches held recently throughout the country, the cry has gone up that higher standards must be set and attained if the ministry is to fulfill its high mission. In this matter, the directing influences of the churches are on the right road. For too long a time the churches have remained stationary; not in matters of dogma, or of faith, but stationary in the sense that they have failed to recognize the higher degree of education reached by the people in general, and the consequent deeper thought by them upon religious matters. Men who go to church because of their beliefs, want to be instructed in these beliefs by ministers who, they feel, are competent to give such instruction by reason of their educational training. The absence from the pulpit of properly qualified ministers has had not a little to do with the absence of men from the churches. A general diffusion of education among the masses, followed by a somewhat superficial knowledge of matters religious, has had a tendency to increase, rather than lessen, a spirit of skepticism so far as spiritual affairs are concerned. No man, probably, can comply with the tenets of any denomination, unless he is ready to accept certain fundamentals upon faith. In this day and generation, but few of the great crowd are willing to accept anything upon faith. Hence the urgent need in the pulpit of men learned in the laws of the church and the reasons therefor, and also deeply versed in human nature and the conditions of every-day life, to the end that they may meet the objections of the skeptics and argue with them as man and man. The college-bred minister should possess the necessary qualifications because of his training; but when all is said, probably the personality of the minister, rather than his knowledge, has most to do with his success or failure.

 LIBRARY TABLE

If I were asked what book I would rather have not missed reading among novels which have appeared this season, my answer would be unhesitatingly "Nancy Stair" is by all odds the sweetest and most attractive of all the stories which have come into my hands. Eleanor Macartney Lane is the author, the same writer whose "Mills of God" produced such a sensation last year. That book was everywhere hailed as a most remarkable exhibition of power for a first piece of work. There is a sweet wholesomeness about this, her last work, which is the rarest of gifts. How seldom style and individuality are manifested among our writers are seen forthwith when we come across a piece of work like this, for it stands out among the other books like a jewel.

The chief character is the orphan daughter of one Jock Stair, or the Lord of Stair, as he is frequently called, a member of the Scotch aristocracy. She is the product of a marriage which was founded upon love and mutual affinity, and hence possesses the physical and mental distinction and grace always associated with love-children. She is a poet of considerable parts, and has been educated by men altogether, so that she has a frank and manly way of looking at things, which, together with a certain natural maiden coquetry, make her absolutely charming. Her love affairs are interesting, and her admiration for the intellectual type of man and the power of leadership occasionally make trouble for her. She has been educated in the law by the famous Edinburgh prosecuting attorney, Hugh Pitcairn, and can use her forensic ability whenever she wishes to help a friend.

This same Hugh Pitcairn, says, by the way: "Ye can't educate women as ye can men. They're elemental creatures, and ye can no more change their nature than ye can stop fire from burning."

The Duke of Borthwicke, one of the characters, and, as far as there is one, the villain of the piece, is a finely drawn character, strong and resolute, clever and possessed of that subtle and yet manifest contempt for less able men which is so typical of a period when intellect counted for more than it does now. But the portions dealing with Robert Burns are perhaps the best in the book. The writer is a firm believer in his genius, and is full of admiration for his wonderful ability, in her zeal giving him a position in the world of letters, which is in all probability much higher than he deserves, but she recognizes the drawback of his Bohemianism. She makes Nancy, who has been completely disillusionized by his wickedness, say: "I've come to the conclusion that it's harder to be a gentleman than a genius. God makes one, but a man has the handling of the other upon himself—about as neat a settlement of a much vexed question as I have ever read.

D. Appleton & Co., New York.

Trusts, Versus the Public Welfare. H. G. Richie, and the reviewer is free to admit his ignorance of the identity of the gentleman, has published a work of some two hundred and fifty short pages to show that "the greatest menace to the public welfare now confronting our people is the formation and operations of the great industrial combinations commonly called trusts, whose purpose is the regulation of production, wages and prices, and the destruction of competition, to the end of complete monopoly of the business of the country."

The writer is somewhat rhetorical and unconvincing as a disputant because he fails to grasp the fundamental facts which underlie the development of trusts, and so attacks his enemy at every point except where he is really vulnerable. A type of his argument is as follows: "I deny that a combination, however great its capital, can manufacture at less cost than the same character of goods can be produced by the individual manufacturer, if he has sufficient capital to enable him to conduct it properly, and the cost of raw materials, labor and supplies are alike to both." Which when boiled down simply means that the private employer can compete with the trust, if he has money enough, a conclusion which hardly needed proving, and when proved cannot be said to tell very much against the new combinations. This is typical of the book, which is written by one who is neither a good writer nor a skilled economist, but who, with that fatuous self-confidence which is far too common, imagines that anybody can talk sensibly on public affairs. But fulminate as he may, even one so poorly constituted as is this author to deal with the question, even he is bound to admit that he is fighting a battle which the development of conditions has made it impossible for him to win. Thus he says: "The great industrial combinations are now so firmly planted and in such overwhelming number with us that legislation of a nature to cause their sudden collapse would be calamitous." In other words, the trusts have now become a necessary and unavoidable part of our system of production.

Published by Fenno, New York.

R. F. Fenno & Co., of New York, are the publishers of "Modern Arms and a Feudal Throne," by T. Milner Harrison. The plot of this romantic story is laid on the South Pacific Ocean. There is intrigue, treachery, love and other troubles enough in this book to satisfy the most sensational mind.

"Trusts vs. the Public Welfare," written by H. C. Richie and published by R. F. Fenno & Co., is merely a record of the transactions of a few "manufacturing combinations." The argument favors the controlling of trusts by legislation.

"The Hayfield Mower," published at Boston, Mass., is a volume of supposed selections from a country newspaper, and is dedicated to people who think and say what they think. There are many trite sayings in this book, and many statements of truth. The author very wisely conceals his name.

More Frauds Working the Public.

The Government Reclamation Service has issued a warning against swindlers now working, it is said, in the Western States, offering to settle home seekers on irrigable lands being reclaimed by the Government. Their strong point is the alleged possession of inside information regarding the plans of the engineers by a display of copies of Government maps and surveys, the swindlers guaranteeing for the consideration of from $50 to $200 to locate settlers upon choice lands. It is now said that these people do not possess any inside information and no data which is not available to the public, and the maps they have are mere township plats, rough or drafts, which can be obtained at any land office. The lands, being operated under Government projects, are withdrawn from all entry excepting homestead, before any actual work of construction is ordered, and the Secretary of the Interior is by law required to outline the size and location of each farm. Until plans are compiled for construction and a contract has been let for the works, it is impossible to state, it is said, with any degree of accuracy what the cost of the water will be, or what land will be irrigated. In calling attention to the matter, a Nevada contemporary, which is particularly interested in the matter just now, says: "Settlers who make filings, based on information from swindlers, will not only lose the money they paid out, but are liable to find later that the lands are not included in the Government property system, and thus will have exhausted their homestead entries upon worthless land. When the proper time comes for throwing open to homestead entry the lands under these great irrigation projects, the Secretary of the Interior will give due notice through the public press. Until such announcement is made, it will not be safe for settlers to locate upon these lands."

An Outburst of Liberality.

We stand corrected of a mistake made last week in quoting a bid of $20,000 for the Copper King property, including the mine in Fresno County, the smelter and machinery in Contra Costa and the office furniture in San Francisco. This should have been $15,000, so our error was in allowing for undue liberality upon the part of the bidders. This offer not being accepted, another bid was made of the same amount, $15,000, for the smelter and other property, omitting the mine in Fresno County. This munificent sum was bid for a smelter almost brand-new, which cost over $200,000. This shows the peculiar ideas which some people have on the question of values when some one is in a corner and open to a squeeze. It is pleasant to know that these ideas in this particular case did not evolve into anything of a practical shape. No wonder that the gentlemen who cater to the "get rich quick" operators get rich in woolly sections of the woolly West. In this connection a bid made for the smelter plant by the Copper Mountain Company of $120,000 recalls the fact that there are some important changes going on at that company's plant at Keswick.

The trouble between this county and the county over the alleged injury of trees and green stuff generally by poisonous fumes from the smelter, has suggested the idea of saving the bi-products of the ores reduced in the smelters. Investigation has shown that a heavy loss has been sustained there for years past, in fact, ever since the works started up. From that time until now, it is estimated that at least 1200 tons of sulphuric acid, or the equivalent thereof, has been passed up the flues. When it is remembered that the material is worth about $20 per ton, the money lost by the waste will figure up something enormous. Now, however, the company proposes to utilize these fumes and recover the sulphuric acid. A plant is being erected at the works for this purpose, where the manufacture of the sulphuric acid will be carried out on a large scale. The fine smelter at Bay Point, now owned by the Copper King Company, would be very handy for the Mountain Copper Company, having a good bay frontage for shipping purposes. If it is sold at all, this is the company which should own these works, for many reasons which will be clear enough to the local management.

Laws Befriend the Rich Thief.

The sum of $10,000 bail money now stands between the penitentiary and Rumble, confidence operator, who is said to have banked over $300,000 during the four years he was allowed the privilege of robbing the public by the grace of those who, had he troubled earlier in his career, would have all piled on top of him. Here the rich thief is many grades above the poor but honest man, or the unfortunate who steals to feed a starving wife and children. There are men now in San Quentin, whose term of years was reduced by some commiserating Judge for the theft of a loaf of bread or its equivalent, while the pampered robber of money amounting to hundreds of thousands, escapes with eighteen months in jail—all the law provides for in his case—with liberty to walk the streets on a paltry bail, while lawyers are permitted to stave off righteous punishment of a knave brazen enough to scout public opinion and defy the law. A condition of society which can tolerate such work as this must be rotten indeed.

The market on Pine street is under the weather in normal condition at this season of the year. Some people say they can recollect a mid-summer market for Comstock shares. The majority of the street habitues who never get farther south than Pine street since they landed at the foot of Montgomery street, say they don't. The mines are looking very well, and Ophir stock pays dividends, but then this does not help things on Pine street.

The local market is quiet just now, as it has been for some time past.

CONFESSION OF A CONNOISSEUR.

The Livermore Valley is one of the most celebrated in California. There is good and sufficient reason for this celebrity. The "Mont Rouge" wines are produced in this valley. About one mile from the town of Livermore is the winery of Chauche & Bon, and it is here that these wines are made.

It is the custom of makers of inferior wines to label their product "high-grade Californian," and through this, people have come to believe that no good wine comes from our State. There is a lamentable lack of discrimination shown by purchasers of wine. It is always safest to ascertain if wine is made to be sold in bulk and if it is, avoid the brand. The "Chauche & Bon Winery" sell their product in glass only. Another safeguard for the consumer is to demand a well-known brand of wine whenever quality is desired. No one ever hears an adverse criticism of the product of the "Mont Rouge" vineyard.

The house of "Chauche & Bon" have never attempted any sophistication of their wares nor have they ever attempted by brag and bombastic utterance to advertise their wines. The "Mont Rouge" brand advertises itself. It is quality that tells and quality only.

Ever since the establishment of the firm, Chauche & Bon have labored to make their wines the equal in quality of the very best European products. That such endeavor has been crowned with entire success is proved by the unrivaled fame the Mont Rouge vineyard enjoys at home and abroad. Every hotel and cafe has the Mont Rouge wines regularly quoted on its wine list, and all the leading clubs use them. The general reputation these wines enjoy among club connoisseurs everywhere is that the money paid for them is well spent. The same care is taken with each wine—Burgundy, Chablis, Medoc, grand Vin Sec, Haut Sauterne and regular Sauternes—and the uniform excellence of these beverages is the feature that naturally commends them to the gourmet.

Their Jurancon is preferred to champagne by those who have sampled the merits of this rare brand. Jurancon was said to be the favorite wine of Henry of Navarre. Chauche & Bon's Jurancon is produced from the vines especially imported from the palace of Henri IV of France. The Mont Rouge vineyard is situated in the most productive part of the Livermore Valley, a mile south of the town of Livermore. The owners have expended much capital in improving their vineyard, and aside from its rich producing qualities it is worthy of note as one of the most beautiful vineyards in California.

The case of David Selby, of Oakland, who was robbed of sixteen hundred dollars, presumably by deck-hands of the steamer Piedmont, calls to our notice a certain laxity in the management of masters on board the ferry steamers. Anybody who has lost any property on the boats knows how difficult it is to get it returned. The company makes every provision for the return of lost property, and provides a courteous clerk at the Oakland mole. But the more valuable pieces of personal property, once left on the boat, are forever lost. I have usually blamed fellow-passengers for such losses, and wondered at the lax morals of well-dressed people. This deck-hand matter, however, sheds new light on the question of the disappearance of valuables. It is fair to the deck-hand, however, to say that he claims that the money found in his possession belongs to some orphans, but however it may be, in his particular case it makes no difference to the general proposition of the iniquity of deck-hands.

Lindblom, the Alaska millionaire, is reported to have gone off to his millions in Alaska, leaving his laundry bill unpaid. This Lindblom is an awful example. A poor tailor who went to Nome to drive reindeer, and there was shown by a squaw the wonderful wealth of that land, he entered into possession of money, without any personal effort on his part, of which even princes might be envious. A low and degraded creature by nature, the possession of the gold has only brought his degradation into stronger relief. His vulgarity and coarseness had now a chance to display themselves. The occasional debauch of beer became the constant debauch of champagne, and he is to-day a most ludicrous example of either the jest or the mistakes of Providence. Beast as he is, he is only an exaggerated type of many men in this city who are in control of means of doing good which they only use to their own destruction.

"Unfair house" being one of the stock cries of our militant trades unionists, it would be interesting to discover the opinion of the Carmen's Union upon one of their number who furnished his wife with twenty-five cents a day on which to board the couple. He was a thrifty soul, and had fifteen hundred dollars in the bank. This bank account was evidently the reward of his wife's abstinence, and she has gone to court to get a divorce and incidentally to restrain him from handling the money. It would be interesting to know just how much increased wages have benefited the families of the men who have secured them. There is more connection than one would suppose between the increase in wages and the increase in the amount of stained glass used in the saloons.

It is reported that Sir Edward Treves, Bart., operator upon appendicitis cases, and hailed as savior of the King of England, approves of Yosemite Valley. This is very nice for the valley. Henceforward the waterfalls will be more abundant, and El Capitan will lift its head more proudly for the praise. Yosemite is more fortunate than the Atlantic of which Oscar Wilde said on one occasion that he had no great opinion. This snobbishness of the local press whenever an unfortunate traveler with a handle to his name comes along, is very unpleasant, and must be in this case annoying to the surgeon baronet, who is a very good fellow and just as remarkable for his modesty as for his ability.

John J. Mangan, who is accused of highway robbery and is at the same time a candidate for a position on the police force, should be given the job in the police department. He will find himself very much at home, for it is said that there are plenty like him on the force. A reputable citizen until he got the idea into his head that he wanted to be a policeman, he has tried to make his conduct square with his ambitions. He has begun quite modestly, but shows spirit and the proper tendency. Give him a little time, and he, too, may be able to burglarize a grocery store which he was supposed to be protecting, and he will become just as impudent a black-mailer as the rest of his confreres. Whether he will ever acquire the habit of insulting helpless females can, of course, only be shown by experience, but his promotion on the force depends upon it.

In the case of prisoner versus pawnbroker, Judge Cook decided to believe the testimony of the prisoner in preference to that of the pawnbroker, particularly as the former had had a good record up to the time of his arrest. Judge Cook has a pretty wit occasionally; sometimes, like most wits to which that adjective can be applied, it takes strange turns, and cuts queer capers, but now and again, as in this instance, he hits it off all right. Search for the stolen property was unsuccessful, the pawnbroker maintaining that he had not bought it; the detectives, however, were convinced that the prisoner spoke the truth when he declared that he had sold it to the pawnbroker. It is to be hoped that the decision will give the local pawnbroking fraternity a good shaking up. They need it badly.

In Oakland they are making arrests under the new truant statute, which requires that parents and guardians should send their children to school. This is a good law in intention, but so far impossible in the execution, for there is not enough school room to accommodate the pupils. In East Oakland alone there are scores of children who cannot be accommodated in the public schools, and who are accordingly wasting their time and learning bad habits in their idleness. But it would be just like the sweet reasonableness of the Oaklander to enforce the law anyway.

The inhabitants of San Francisco who spend their week-end holiday in roaming through the country, are likely to have their liberty much curtailed. About one hundred thousand acres in the neighborhood of Livermore will be barred to the festive picknickers, and the Marin County rules become more and more stringent as regards trespassers. It must be admitted that the city people have for the most part only themselves to thank, and their own barbaric behavior. People that do not know enough not to build camp fires everywhere, and who wantonly destroy flowers and trees, must be stopped even if the innocent suffer with them.

A Miners' Union agent has decamped with some fifteen hundred dollars of union funds. He was wise in his generation. He knew from his experience of trades unionism that the funds would in all probability be wasted, so he fancied that they might be put to good use on his account, anyway. There is this to be said, that if he had not taken them, some other officer, in all probability, would, and that the forces of civil discord are fifteen hundred out, which is somewhat of a gain.

"YOUR SINS, MY LORD, HAVE COME HOME" Remembrance at the hands of the people as a benefactor.

As it is, the benefit to be derived is but a limited one, consisting of a warning to the depositors who have their money in the keep of William H. Crocker.

It is reported by the daily press that representatives of W. H. Crocker and Prince Poniatowski have paid over to Mr. Henry J. Crocker, cousin to W. H. Crocker, the sum of $45,000 as a compromise in the suit brought by Mr. Henry J. Crocker against his cousin and titled brother-in-law to recover the sum of $89,475 he claimed he was swindled out of by these two worthies.

The daily papers have repeatedly given a history of this very questionable transaction, and the story as given will bear re-publication:

"The transaction causing all the trouble occurred in 1900. Henry J. Crocker had $75,000 of Pacific Coast Jockey Club stock and $27,431.25 of Western Turf Association stock, a total of $102,431.25. William H. Crocker, cousin, had large holdings of the same stocks, and he told Henry J. he was going to sell it, through Prince Poniatowski, and suggested that Henry J. do likewise.

"The latter agreed to the proposition, and the Prince informed him later that he had sold his shares for $75,56.25 in cash and 108 second mortgage bonds of W. H. Crocker's Sierra Railway Company. The bonds had a cash value of only $5,400, so Henry J. Crocker only saw $12,956.25 in the deal for himself. Later on the complaint filed in the suit alleged that the plaintiff found out that William H. Crocker was able to realize heavily on the stocks. For that reason Henry J. Crocker brought the suit for $89,475."

From the allegation of facts, it is readily deduced that there was a conspiracy to do up one of the parties in the case, and Henry J. Crocker was the lamb that was led to the slaughter on the altar of his relative's cupidity. With cunning dishonesty, it seems that a scheme was deliberately concocted to rob a man who had placed entire confidence in his banker cousin. This banker is said to have connived with other parties to hide or keep from his client and relative the real figure at which he parted with the property entrusted to his care, and it was not until he was threatened with legal proceedings that he was compelled to disgorge the ill-gotten gains. If the statement is true, as alleged in the public press, W. H. Crocker should be pilloried as a common thief. A confidence man, a seller of gold bricks, is respectable in comparison to the banker who takes advantage of blood relationship to filch. With him there is not the excuse of necessity. He has plenty of money, he is independent. No, it was the lure of the miser, the mere lust for gold, hoards and hoards of the metal, that made this man an unconvicted felon.

And if the act is an indefensible one as regards his relation to his cousin and client, what can we say regarding the position this man occupies as regards his depositors? If the facts are true as they are alleged, the depositor, the client who has no blood relationship to offer as a restraining influence, has little chance with this wolf of finance.

If those that live in palaces, if those that should be an example of rectitude and right conduct as between man and man, indulge themselves openly in thievery and criminality, what may we expect of the man of little education, the lowly man of the poor? It is the pernicious example of such men as William H. Crocker that helps to make criminals, that fills our penitentiaries, make the nation's unrest and begets the anarchist.

Henry J. Crocker made a grievous mistake when he accepted the compromise. He should have pressed the case to the bitter end; he could then have asked

Mr. J. W. Irwin gave an illustrated stereopticon lecture at the Alhambra on Tuesday night last. This lecture was given under the auspices of the Camera Club, and the attendance was very large and enthusiastic. Mr. Irwin will go to the World's Fair at St. Louis and exhibit the pictures extolling San Francisco's present and future, with a hope of aiding in the advertising of this city and its claims as a residence place. Bon voyage.

The lecture was enthusiastically received, and we suppose that the performance at the Alhambra was in a measure "trying it on the dog." We respectfully suggest that the pictures of our big buildings, with the rookeries in evidence for long stretches alongside, will not prove of great interest to Easterners. It will be well to remember also that some people, probably a large majority of Mr. Irwin's St. Louis audiences, will not be farmers, and that it would be advisable to carefully cull out much of the matter shown at the Alhambra Theatre, which should be of necessity of interest to a bucolic population only.

There has been brought to our notice a new Realty Company, and from the investigations made, they seem to have a good, strong proposition. Mr. M. J. Keller, the Market street merchant, is the President of the company. His name alone warrants confidence in their ability to carry to a successful issue their new undertaking. The name of the company is the Germania Realty and Loan Company, suite 522 Crossley Building, city.

SOCIETY

NOON IN THE WOODS.

"Hush!" said the pine on the hill,
 And all of them listened together—
 Listened and nodded and grew so still,
 Still in the golden weather—
 And the squirrel who fancied he'd something to do
 And chattered awhile complaining,
 Felt the spell of the silence creep over him, too,
 For noon in the woods was reigning.

And the sunshine slips through the boughs,
 And gold is the place of its falling,
 Gold where the wild doves murmur and drowse,
 And gold is the coo of their calling.
 The little bright eyes are closed in sleep,
 And hushed is the sob of complaining,
 For silence broods, as it broods on the deep
 When noon in the woods is reigning.

—Roland Whittle.

Dear Bessie: The wedding of Genevieve Huntsman and Harry Williar was the chief event of the week in town. The ceremony, which was performed by the Reverend Mr. Clampett, took place at noon on Wednesday at the Huntsman house on Sutter street, which was fragrant with roses and sweet peas combined with the stately palm, and Genevieve looked lovely in her bridal gown of white chiffon cloth. Her sister, Mrs. Kindlinberger, in pure white, was her sole attendant, and Dr. Kindlinberger officiated as best man to his future brother-in-law, the company being mostly the relatives of both bride and groom. August 3d is the date set for Stella McCalla's marriage to William Chapin, and the wedding is to come off at the Navy Yard, so we shall have the added pleasure of the trip up and home again, and the whole affair promises to be delightful. Lily will be her sister's maid of honor, and though I believe it is not quite decided, I hear pink is to be the color scheme throughout. It seems we are not to have the McIntosh Menzies wedding in California, after all, but that it will take place in the Adirondacks, where the McIntoshes are at present. Mr. Menzies goes on in time for the wedding, which is set for the 7th of July, and will bring his bride to San Rafael, where they will spend the summer.

What a hospitable lot are the wearers of the buttons! By that I mean both the officers and the ladies of their households, and especially is it the case at the Presidio. Were it not for the dwellers there, I do not know what we should do for a dance these days. There was a delightful little hop given by the officers of the 10th Infantry last Friday night; the 28th had one on Wednesday night, and last night there was another, at which the Artillery and Cavalry were hosts. General McArthur had a grand dress parade of all the troops in garrison on the golf links on Tuesday, and perhaps all the girls left in town did not put in an appearance, even though it was so early in the morning! But, you see, there is very little doing at present. Theatre parties are the staple form of entertainment just now. Maud Adams had the lion's share of them last week, with quite a number of them on the tapis for Sothern and Mrs. Leslie Carter next week. The Harvey girls are with us at last, and are quite equaling expectations; they have already been dined by Emily Wilson and lunched by Gertrude Smith, and been over at San Rafael with their aunt, the Baroness von Schroeder, who has been killing the fatted calf for them. Emily and Charlotte Wilson were over, too, on Saturday and Sunday, as well as a lot of others. Bessie Wilson's luncheon was a dainty affair, at which a dozen girls were invited to meet Alice Herrin, who is here on her vacation, as she has, I hear, decided to return East for another term at school. Agnes Buchanan's tea last Friday was for a pretty bride from Baltimore, Hill by name, and she asked all her friends to meet her; Agnes is going East for the summer, and will depart some time next week.

Out-of-town parties will soon increase and multiply, in fact they are already considered the correct thing, and those who are asked to them from town enjoy them enthusiastically. Laura told me of a lovely little luncheon Mrs. Osgood Hooker gave eight or ten of her friends at Burlingame last week, which was followed by the inevitable bridge, to which all her guests are devoted. And our young bachelors are bestirring themselves these days and playing host very charmingly at a series of house parties. Frank Whittier is the latest to join the ranks, which includes Dick Hotaling and Joe Rosborough, and will have several of them at the Whittier place on the McCloud River during June and July. I hear it is the most fascinating place in the world when one gets there, but the trip is no trifle. Every one is looking forward with more than usual expectancy to August at Monterey this year, for besides the polo and tennis tournaments, and the other sports which are then the attraction of the hour, there is to be a grand encampment of the military, which Aunt Susie says will recall the days of long ago, only this time General MacArthur and his whole staff will be in camp, as well as the smaller fry. Can you think of anything more delightful? The Burton Harrisons will probably be here about that time, on their summer visit to California, and lots of others—Eastern chiefly—are expected to prolong their trip West from the St. Louis Fair. But who do you think we are soon likely to gaze upon? As you would never guess in a decade of years, I will have pity on your curiosity and say Santos-Dumont, no less—he of air-ship fame, as well as the man who is supposed to be making Mrs. Spreckels' life miserable on account of Lurline, who is said to favor his suit.

Apocryphal Aunt Susie, she waxed quite tender in her reminiscences when hearing of the death of Mrs. Fred Zeile, "dear little Sophie Smith," as she called her, the youngest of the Smith girls who were so popular in her young days, several decades ago. "First went Quica, the sweetest and best beloved of them all; then Nonie (Mrs. Santa Marina), and now Sophie!"

Dr. Arnold Genthe will be among the missing in another week, as he has decided on a trip to the Fatherland, instead of spending the summer in a round of visits among his California friends; the Henry Duttons are not going away so soon as they intended, and it will be nice if we can keep them over next winter's gaieties; they had a lovely time in Yosemite. We are looking for the Fred Kohls in the near future, especially the bride, who has the reputation of being very charming and beautiful. The Mayo Newhalls have gone for the summer to Burlingame, where they have taken the Kruttschnitt place, and are, I hear, to entertain extensively. The Gaston Ashes are at their San Benito ranch; Bessie and Bernie Wilson are going to spend most of the summer between Del Monte and Tahoe; Bernie Landers Johnston has been up from Los Angeles on a visit to her mother, and is looking fine; Ella Morgar is down at Del Monte with Flora Low, who, with her mother, is as usual there for the summer; the Lows just dote on Del Monte. Jim Coleman has departed on one of his yachting trips on the Aggie, going first to Santa Cruz, then further south along the Coast, and finally to the Hawaiian Islands, expecting to be away all summer. The Charley Baldwins are back in California again—Mrs. Baldwin much improved in health—and will remain here some time, anyhow. They are at Mountain View, and Joe Loughborough is home again, after her wanderings in foreign lands. Jennie had a letter the other day from Edith Bull, who, with Maie and Kathleen, are enjoying Italy to their heart's content, and expect to be there for a while; the other Bulls—Jerome and his wife—are here for the summer, which they will spend at Santa Cruz with Mrs. Jarboe.

Constance Borrowe is going to Pacific Grove for the summer; Georgie Speiker leaves next week for a month's outing in the Yellowstone Park region—Mrs. Speiker goes too; Beatrice Fife is bound for Santa Barbara to play tennis. I understand we are not to have Mrs. Clover with us all summer, dearly as she loves her Nana home, but that she and her two daughters are going to Japan next month, where they will make a stay of some duration, and be here but a short time when they return.

Agnes Partridge apparently thinks nothing of tripping across the broad Pacific, for she is here again, making her third round voyage within a year. She and Bishop Partridge arrived during the week and are with the Simpsons at their home on Vallejo street for a visit before going on East; and "Brother John" and Mrs. Hemphill are home again from their trip to Australia, arriving last Monday. Gertrude Dutton and Maylita Pease have gone to Yosemite for a month's camp, and Kate Dillon gave them a pink dinner on Monday night as a sort of adieu; and I must not forget to tell you that the new Sequoia Club had its first full-dress, I suppose you might call it, reception at the St. Francis on Tuesday night.

BUNKER HILL DAY.

On Friday of next week, June 17th, special trains will leave Third and Townsend streets, San Francisco, at 8:30 a. m. for Los Gatos, where exercises will be held in honor of the 129th anniversary of the Battle of Bunker Hill.

The Board of Trade of Los Gatos and various military and fraternal organizations of that place will meet the excursionists on arrival of trains, and conduct them to the park where the exercises will be held.

Mr. Arthur Cunningham, distinguished baritone, kindly consented to deliver the oration. Mr. Hart has the reputation of being a most brilliant and polished speaker.

Mr. Arthur Cunningham, the distinguished bariton, has been consented to sing his favorite song, "My Own United States," and Mr. Alfred Wilkie will sing again "The Sword of Bunker Hill." The "Star Spangled Banner" and "The Marseillaise" will be sung by other artists.

No pains will be spared by the committee to make the day honored as it should be. During the afternoon games, races and dancing will afford amusement for the young and others. It is owing to the efforts of Bunker Hill Association that the 17th of June is becoming a day of patriotic demonstration.

For the convenience of the Oakland and Alameda contingent, a special train will leave 14th and Webster street at 8:15 a. m., and Park street station at 8:45 a. m. respectively, connecting with the Los Gatos train at the mole. Round-trip tickets at $1 each may be procured at the depots on the morning of the excursion, or from the secretaries of the various societies.

SALMON FISHING AT MONTEREY.

This is salmon fishing time in Monterey Bay, and many fishermen who enjoy this exciting sport are at Hotel del Monte. Here is a novel vacation offering a peculiar combination of attractions. The salmon fisherman may leave his wife and family at the hotel in the enjoyment of every comfort, while he spends his days in angling luxury on the bay. Already many have taken advantage of this chance for an outing, and others are planning the trip. Del Monte is more popular than ever this season with golf, bowling, tennis, automobiling, riding, driving and fishing as the chief allurements.

Mr. Swanton, chairman of the energetic civic institution known as the "New Santa Cruz Committee," announces that on June 11th, Saturday, there is to be a dedication of the "Neptune Casino and Santa Cruz Cottage and Tent City," and the programme includes a parade and a general jollification. We can easily believe Mr. Swanton and the members of the committee. Santa Cruz always does things well. Never was a convention handled in better shape than was the Democratic affair at Santa Cruz recently. Any one in search of a great time, with plenty of enjoyment, had better go to Santa Cruz during the season that will be inaugurated on June 11th.

THE LOOKER-ON

Have you heard the latest story
Of the poor, perplexed physician,
Who escaped with more than glory
From a compromised position?
The lady drank carbohc,
The physician took his pump,
He cured the lady's colic,
But she had him on the jump.

For she said unless he married her
She never would get better,
And the silly doctor tarried there
And wore the golden fetter.
But the doctor knows a thing or two,
He learnt what legal pull meant,
He took the means to bring her to,
And then he got annullment.

When Mike Tarpey and Jim Budd lost their tempers, and nearly came to blows in the Palace Grill last week, the inner mysteries of the Hearst campaign came closer to exposure than either gentleman desired. From the standpoint of the seeker after truth, it is to be regretted that Tarpey did not land his heavy right upon the jaw of the politician from Stockton, for then Budd, in self-defense, might have been wrought to such a pitch that in his anger he would have blurted out more than a mere intimation of the use of a sack at Santa Cruz. Bad blood between the two men has existed ever since Tarpey took charge of the Hearst campaign.

Tarpey's mistrust of Budd may have had its origin prior to Lane's campaign for Governor, but Budd's attitude in that fight did much to confirm in Tarpey's mind any misgivings he might have had about the former Governor. While Tarpey may not have been for Lane, he had his own views of the men who accepted positions upon the Democratic State Central Committee, and then knifed the party's nominee. It is a matter of public knowledge that some of Budd's political intimates, placed upon the State Central Committee by Barney Murphy, were out publicly against Lane, and yet had the hardihood to remain upon the committee. Tarpey considered this treachery, and did not hesitate to say so. To his mind, such conduct was unbecoming a gentleman. When he assumed the management of the Hearst campaign, he decided to place no reliance upon those who had already shown themselves unworthy of trust in the Gubernatorial campaign. Budd, it will be remembered, discovered urgent business in Texas and other places, as soon as Tarpey took command. The meeting at the Palace the other day was one of the first public occasions when the two men have come together since the Santa Cruz Convention. Had it not been for the interference of others, Tarpey would certainly have landed heavily on Budd before the latter could run away. But the end is not yet. After Hearst's hopes are buried at St. Louis, Budd will begin blustering again. He will tell how much better he could have done than Tarpey, and if he only talks long enough and loud enough, the probabilities are good for the relation of the inner history of the Hearst campaign on the Coast.

From a little tin box in a street car, I took yesterday a copy of a small paper called "Transit Tidings," issued by the United Railroads. Though it was evidently the third issue of the little paper, it was the first copy I had seen. It impressed me very favorably, for I gained from it the idea that the United Railroads, by its publication, is endeavoring to win friends for the road by putting the people and the corporation on "speaking terms," as it were. The "Tidings" makes honorable mention of two cool-headed motor men who, by acting promptly, saved the lives of two children who were knocked down by cars; it has letters from citizens giving suggestions for the betterment of the car service, and in other ways it endeavors to awaken among the people a kindly interest in the road and its affairs. It says its mission is one of peace, and that it wishes to bring about the kindest relations between the carmen and the public, and to minimize friction. Other public service corporations should find a valuable hint in this endeavor of the United Railroads to communicate directly with the people, without the assistance of walking delegates or other professional agitators.

I noticed this on the 7:30 a. m. trip of a McAllister street car Tuesday. I also noticed that a "green" gripman was being "broke in" on this very same car. Women and men alike were holding on to straps that they might not be thrown from the car. A Devisadero street car, a water wagon and several pedestrians escaped injury by the timely intervention of the instructor behind the student.

It occurs to me that apprentices should never be allowed to practice on a car while running on Market street, much less while the cars are crowded. Suburban lines should be selected for this purpose. (Editor Tidings, please notice.)

The Transportation Club promises to be one of the best good-fellowship clubs in town. Ever since the offices of the Eastern roads concentrated in the Palace Hotel block, the local railroad men have yearned for a club of their own. Now, they have temporary quarters at the Palace, and there they received their friends last Saturday. The club expects to move into the present Pacific-Union club-house about Christmas next. That occasion will be a memorable one in local clubdom, for these railroad men have a way of their own in entertaining guests that may well be the despair of others not so well versed in the methods of making a visitor feel that the world and all it contains is his to command. There are now about 200 names on the roll, and among them are the names of the leading resident general agents and traffic representatives of Eastern lines, and a large number of the general officers of the local railroad and steamship companies.

The withdrawal of the name of Warren Olney, the well-known lawyer, who is Mayor of Oakland, from the membership of the Pacific-Union, has caused not a little talk among clubmen and Alameda politicians. Olney's sponsors were informed that if they pressed his candidacy for membership, he would be black-balled. They therefore withdrew his name. It was the only thing to do. As Mayor of Oakland, Mr. Olney has antagonized some powerful interests, the representatives of which have determined to prevent his election to the Post-street club. No matter what may be the rights or the wrongs of the affair between Olney and his opponents, it seems regrettable that his friends should not first have canvassed the possibilities of his election before posting his name. The necessity of withdrawal gives its club unnecessary notoriety, and extends and embitters the feud between the Olneyites and the anti-Olneyites.

With John McLaren, Superintendent of Golden Gate Park, will go the good wishes of the entire community during his trip abroad. To him, more than to any other man, does the city owe its magnificent park. His genius has converted the sand-dunes into a pleasure ground than which none in America is more beautiful. He has earned his vacation, and his friends hope it will be of great benefit not only to him directly, but to the city indirectly, by receiving the benefits of the ideas he may gather among the great gardens of Europe. The Park Commissioners appropriated $1,000 to pay the expenses of the Superintendent's trip. While no one begrudges him the money, one who watches public affairs cannot help asking by what authority such an appropriation was made. Of course, it is against the law, but if, as it seems to be justified by public opinion, no one will raise a forcible objection. Still, it is a dangerous precedent. Now, suppose the Board of Fire Commissioners should give Mr. Parry $1,000 to assist him in observing conditions in the fire departments throughout the East; or suppose the School Directors should give a principal $1,000 to travel in Europe; or suppose the Board of Works should give its President $1,000 to spend during a vacation abroad—would the citizens quietly acquiesce in this appropriation of public funds? Yet, each supposed incident would be just as legal as the act of the Park Commissioners.

The mention of Mr. Parry's name reminds me that some one has been trying to bribe that honest official. Mr. Parry says so himself; else, I would not even intimate that any person would have the hardihood to thus insult him. Mr. Parry says that a representative of a firm which had a contract to furnish supplies to the Fire Commissioner asked him what was necessary "to do business" with the Commission. Mr. Parry immediately repulsed him. Unfortunately he does not know the name of the insolent fellow, and more unfortunately, he cannot describe him, so that he may be arrested and sent to jail. It is certainly outrageous that a public official whose reputation is so well established as is Mr. Parry's should be subjected to the insult of the intimation that he is "doing business." This incident shows the dangers to which honest men, like Mr. Parry, are subjected in public office. His friends would not be surprised if Mr. Parry should resign from the Fire Commission while smarting under the indignity offered him.

That fellow, Reuben Wolf, who was dismissed from the Police Department because, as a policeman expressed it, "his work was too coarse," has some commendable features in his roguish make-up. It is said he has been engaged in the somewhat commendable practice of "skinning" policemen. He presented to them a scheme by which, he assured them, they could get rich even quicker than they can with their every-day opportunities. He milked them for a few months, and then his scheme exploded. But the duped policemen are not out after him with warrants. They understood, of course, that under his scheme they were to get rich at the expense of other people. So they have voiced no complaints. There is honor, you know, among—policemen.

Miss Bessie Allen has gained the degree of Doctor of Philosophy at the University of Chicago, by a brilliant dissertation on "The Psychology of the Guinea Pig." She has discovered that the guinea pig is born with its mental faculties well developed. That explains why the guinea pig begins making tracks for Porkopolis as soon as its legs get strong enough. It knows it will be stall-fed there, and become a personage of interest to the elect. If Miss Allen will now issue a treatise on "The Transformation of the Pork Chop," a grateful nation will rise up and confer upon her the degree of beatification.

Judge Lawlor's action in ordering the jurors in the Eppinger case into the custody of the Sheriff was received with mixed emotions by bench and bar; but the men most directly affected, the jurors, raised a howl that will be heard these many days wherever patriots assemble to discuss the progress of their great country. It is presumed that Judge Lawlor's order was predicated upon the reported experience of at least one of the jurors in the Botkin case, and upon the difficulty generally experienced by the Judges in requiring jurors to concentrate their attention exclusively on the questions at issue in the trial of a criminal charge. The Judge acted within his authority when he ordered the jurors into practical imprisonment, but to a disinterested observer it does seem that he could have given them at least half a day within which to arrange for the transaction of their personal business before making them wards of the Sheriff. It is well enough to enforce the law, to the end that jury trials shall be above suspicion, but there is hardly any occasion for the harsh measures resorted to so abruptly by Judge Lawlor.

Extract from the S. F. Examiner, July 15, 1904.

"A pathetic incident happened this afternoon which has cast a gloom over a heretofore happy office. Poor Willie! His mind has shone a tendency to become unhinged—in fact, bug-house—and the end came this afternoon, as stated. A tunny little black wagon rumbled up to the door, and to the craning necks sticking out of up-stair windows, the poor chap chanted the following:

I am a maniac, a maniac man,
A red-hot maniac, fresh from the pan,
And the moon, yes, the moon, I am going to soon,
For I bought it, I bought it, at yesterday noon.

And the world is sad, for the world is mad—
Too bad!

And a step from the moon to the earth far above,
Is as short, short, short as an old maid's love
Who is

PLEASURE'S WAND

A TRUSTY TIP ON THINGS THEATRICAL.

GRAND—Alcibioune MacDowell—"A Captain of Navarre" an indifferently well acted, poorly written play.

CENTRAL—The Peddler, an enjoyable drama.

FISHER'S—"U. S." crowded houses and a great success, scenically and musically.

TIVOLI—"Sergeant Kitty," a fair performance.

ORPHEUM—Vaudeville, one of the best of this year's programs.

ALCAZAR—A fine performance of "Under Two Flags." Adele Block scores sensational success.

COLUMBIA—Maude Adams, crowded houses, "Little Minister."

CHUTES—An exceptionally good theatrical bill. New attractions in Zoo

Melbourne MacDowell may thank his lucky stars that the Sardou plays preceded the production of "A Captain of Navarre."

The play is a wonderful example of how a play should not be constructed. It strikes one as having been cut to such an extent that only the shreds of the original remain. MacDowell does not show up to any advantage in this play, and the only artistic work is by Miss Fuller. Her Duchesse D'Armenonville is very well done. Miss Fuller was still suffering from a cold, and it was with difficulty that she carried out her part. The Hector de Savigny of Mr. Griffiths was remarkable for the unintelligible mouthing of the words of the author. This was probably just as well. Judging by what the others had to say, his lines could not have been of any very great importance.

Mr. Robert Elliot's rendition of that peripatetic drunk, "Annibal Locust," must have given that actor great joy, for it enabled him to swallow his words in a most fascinating manner. He has the mumbling gallop habit in conversation, and it is with a sigh of relief that one turns to the loud bombast of MacDowell. The rest of the company was below mediocrity in "A Captain of Navarre."

By a freak of the stage management, the scenery of the third act, which is advertised as "The Grande Esplanade of the Louvre," is a by-street in any old town in Holland.

"Sergeant Kitty" at the Tivoli has been drawing fair houses through the week, and as the opera is full of pretty airs it is likely to remain with us some time. Miss Sefton made her debut in San Francisco in this opera, and it is with regret that I have to record that Miss Sefton was in a blue funk and not herself. I ask that judgment be suspended on the little lady. Why? Because it is only fair. She appears among a lot of people who have no reason to love her, and besides, she is better looking than the old crew at the Eddy street house. She has beautiful shoulders, and if it develops that she can really truly sing, how thankful we will be after the torture of listening to the thin and the fat ladies so long.

Ferris Hartman is on again as a Captain of Husars. He looks more like a Christmas tree ornament than anything else I can call to mind. I wish he would lose his voice, and never, never again find it. I would enjoy Hartman as a mute, but cannot conceive of him as anything else, and enjoyable.

Harking back to Miss Sefton, it occurs to me that it must be a terrible thing to land among the members of the Tivoli Company. Just think of having to face Hartman as a stage manager, and then there are the old ladies and the fat women and the very thin ones. I can imagine their eyes, jealous, envious eyes, following a strange young thing about and ill-wishing her.

The best show of the week, and a general surprise to everybody, is the performance of "Under Two Flags," with Miss Adele Block and Durkin in the principal roles. This play could very easily have stood three or four weeks' performance.

Miss Adele Block's "Cigarette" is in many respects up to that of Blanche Bates, and in others it surpasses that of her rival.

Mr. Durkin, as Bertie Cecil, is as usual very good, although there is a soupcon of too much reserve. Hilliard's "Earl of Rockingham" is a very fine performance, except for an accentuation of mannerisms. There is a bit too much of mustache tugging and the peculiar walk is exaggerated too much, as it finally merges into a caricature and not a portraiture. Miss Starr's "Silver Pheasant" is a very good piece of work.

The "Cigarette" of Miss Block is the best work this good-looking and gifted young woman has done in San Francisco. Only once there is a slight tendency to rant. Hot passion and seductiveness is her forte, and she does it well. Durkin is a good foil, but he would have to be as cold as the proverbial "Greenland's icy mountains" to withstand the passionate and tempestuous plea of this gray-eyed and raven-haired woman. Miss Block may consider her "Cigarette" one of this season's theatrical triumphs. Scenically the play is superbly put on, and the sand storm scene is an exceptional novelty.

Speaking of stage-management, all the local theatres are in need of a shake-up. The entire mechanical force should have attended the Anna Held and the Mansfield performances to study the real thing. They need object lessons.

The Maud Adams engagement continues at the Columbia until Sunday night. Artistically considered, this engagement may be said to be a great success.

At the Central, "The Peddler" draws the usual enthusiastic crowd.

Edna Aug continues to be the attraction at Fisher's. This little woman is the drawing card at the popular O'Farrell street house.

At the Chutes, the "Alfons," equilibrists extraordinary, are a great attraction.

The Orpheum has a better show this week than it has had for weeks past, and the house is crowded nightly. There are six big new acts, and the applause has been generous the whole week. The shapely Shattuck has not lost any of her curves or popularity, and her singing is greatly improved since the last time I saw her.

"Lover's Lane" is to close the regular stock season at the Alcazar, and the clever company will retire from the scene of action for a brief rest. We have come to look upon them as friends. Conscientious friends who look to our amusement. Following the retirement of the stock will come the summer engagement of Mr. White Whittlesey. He will open with Augustus Thomas's dramatization of Richard Harding Davis's "Soldiers of Fortune," on June 27th.

"Robin Hood" is in preparation at the Tivoli. There will be an exceptionally strong cast, and will include such artists as Kate Condon, contralto; Barron Ferthold, tenor; Willard Sims, comedian; and John Dunsmuir, basso. The management announces that it will spare no pains to make this a great production.

The next burlesque at Fischer's will be "The Mormons," by Judson Brusie. The author says it will excel any previous effort from his pen.

Yorke and Adams, Al. Fields and Edwin Clarke have been signed for a year by the Fischer management.

Russell Brandow and Stella Wiley, colored entertainers, will make their first appearance at the Chutes this coming week. Harry Green, a singer and monologist of repute, will also be new, and Jones, Sylvester and Pringle, the "Imperials of Minstrelsy," will change their songs. Richard Walsh and Adele Ligon will continue their musical eccentricity, "The Twentieth Century Burglar and the French Soubrette," and Alfons, the European equilibrist, will appear for his third and last week. Mildred Manning, the singer of illustrated songs, will be heard in new selections, and the animatoscope will change its moving pictures.

Agoust, Weston & Company, comedy jugglers, will appear at the Orpheum this coming week. Their work is said to be funny in the extreme, and their act abounds in sensations. The comedian, Eddie Heron, supported by Madge Douglass and Will L. White, will make his first vaudeville appearance in this city. His introduction will be Wilmer & Vincent's one-act farce, "A Friend of the Family." The Romani Trio, from Berlin, will present a musical act.

Henry Miller will play a very limited season this year at the Columbia, because he has to be in New York as soon as possible in order to organize a great company for a stock season in the metropolis. Miller is to head the company.

"Charlie's Aunt," the lady "from the land where the nuts come from," will be put on at the Alcazar next week. This is the Alcazar's greatest laughing success.

Mrs. Leslie Carter comes to the Grand for a limited engagement commencing next Monday night. She will present Belasco's new play, "Du Barry." During Mrs. Carter's engagement she will play two matinee engagements, on Saturdays and Wednesdays. It is important to remember that during the stay of Mrs. Carter the curtain will rise promptly at eight o'clock and at two o'clock at the afternoon performances.

"The Proud Prince," in which E. H. Sothern will be seen at the Columbia Theatre commencing next Monday night, has proved the most successful play of his entire career. He brings on tour the entire New York production and company. Mr. Sothern's presentation of the play is even more pretentious than any he has ever given to the stage. A hundred and fifty people take part in the performance.

At the Central next week we are to have a revival of that fascinating American drama, "The Octoroon." The company at the Central is peculiarly adapted for such a performance, and the stage is an ideal one for the production of this plantation play. We look for crowded houses at the Central next week.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs

Politics and Diplomacy in Russia.

The political and diplomatic aspects of the Russian-Japanese war have shifted to European Russia, and are centered very close to the throne. The political aspect is not something new under the sun in statecraft. We have had lots of it in this country in the past. It is the intrigues of jingoes to discredit those in authority, and force a general shaking up of the official Government. In Russia it is unsparring criticism of the conduct of the war both in St. Petersburg and at the front. A feeling against General Kuropatkin has been worked up in Russia that only a victory that is beyond human possibility to achieve would reinstate him in the confidence of the people. And this is the same man who, only two months ago, left for the front amid the plaudits of more than 100,000,000 of the Czar's subjects, and was everywhere hailed as the greatest warrior of modern times. He failed to make good his boastings, and his enemies are crushing him beneath the iron heel of other aspiring would-be military geniuses. Many another General, even in America, has gone down as a "never was" or as a "has been" under the fierce and relentless fire of jealousy, intrigue and criticism far in the rear of the battle line. But Kuropatkin does not fall alone. Every General on the Russian side is being torn in Russian political circles as if by ravenous wolves. All of them have been out-generated by sea and by land by the "little brown pagans," and all Russia is floundering about in its own pool of humiliation. Even General Stoessel at Port Arthur, from whom so much was expected, is now being held up as worse than a failure because all Russia now admits that the nation's Gibraltar in the Far East is doomed to pass, with all its vast and expensive armament, out of Russian control. From loud boastings and threats to not only chase the Japanese out of Manchuria and Korea and invade Japan as locusts swarm and devour, and to utterly destroy their military power, Russia's voice has weakened to a whisper, and in a whisper she asks: "Can Port Arthur be saved?" If Japan has surprised the world by her marvelous military genius, Russia has no less surprised the nations by a painful lack of it. Still, it is well known that the Russian commanders at the front are kept in tangles all the time by the bureaucrats at St. Petersburg, who have at no time been willing that any man should return from the Far East a hero and the people's idol. And the Czar? The poor weakling is molded from day to day into the shape that best suits his callers, but none dare tell him the truth for fear of gaining his displeasure. This fear of his wrath comes from a sincere belief that he is not only Czar by the grace of God, but is the personal representative of Christ on earth. Still he fears assassination every minute of his waking hours.

The diplomatic aspect of Intrigues of Russia. the Russian-Japanese war as developed in Russia, reflects conditions far more threatening than the crushing of Generals at the front by home political intrigue. Russian diplomatists have for centuries been conspicuous for ability, cunning and persistence, but never before were they confronted by a loss of national prestige. And not only that, but never before was there so much discontent and outspoken criticism of the conduct of affairs of the nation by the people. Unfortunately for the Government, more Russians can read than ever before, and even though they do not get the world's happenings until after the newspapers have been re-edited by the Government, they are able to put this and that together and from it see that they have been grossly deceived concerning the progress of the war, which, together with increasing taxes and loss of confidence in the integrity of those in authority, is giving birth to the sort of resentment that usually culminates in a revolution. This the Czar knows and feels, and he knows, too, that exercising his autocratic power he could end the war by a stroke of his pen, but autocrat that he is, such a stroke of his pen would mean his abdication as the next act—or assassination by some one of his own official household. That is the situation as far as the Czar is concerned, but the diplomatist and statesmen do not want him to end the war by conceding everything to the Japanese. They do not want the feeling abroad that Russia is really a weak nation to spread, and they do want to give the people something that will turn their restlessness and distrust into loyal and enthusiastic support of the Government's policy at home and abroad. And to accomplish all that they are resorting to all kinds of tricks and schemes to involve the other nations in their war in the Far East. They expect the Anglo-Saxon nations to line up with Japan, but France is uncertain. She blows hot and cold as to aiding Russia, but is pronounced as against Japan. It is surmised that within the last fortnight France and England have come to an "understanding." Germany can be relied upon at any moment, Russia well knows, but the diplomatic hints that the tripartite between Germany, Italy and Austria has been or soon will be annulled by Italy, weakens Germany as an ally of Russia; besides diplomatic seed sowers, presumably from London, have some seeds of suspicion in St. Petersburg to the effect that the Kaiser is playing for an excuse to invade the Black Sea country at Russia's ultimate expense. But for all that, Russia's only salvation at home and in the Far East is in involving all Europe and America in a world wide war, and it is almost absolutely necessary for Russia's diplomatists to accomplish something tangible in that direction before Port Arthur falls, for upon its fall the rottenness, the imbecility and the official corruption in Russia's official life will be fully exposed, and statesmen the world over have doubts of the ability of the authorities to turn the current of public opinion and avert internal conditions that might be far more disastrous to Russia's national life than the annihilation of Kuropatkin and his entire army. The strength of Russian loyalty and patriotism lies largely in hitherto unshaken faith in the Czar's divine right to rule the people, and in his infallibility as Christ's representative on earth, and it will be a sorry day for the "White Father" when the people's faith is destroyed by blunders, dishonesty and stupidity in the nation's "infallible head." "A little learning is a dangerous thing," and that is the intellectual condition of the Russian masses. All this the Czar's diplomatists know, and they know that unless they can involve the nations in their Far East troubles a constitutional monarchy will be forced upon the St. Petersburg Government. Most likely it all will culminate in the latter, anyway, for London influences seem to be dominating throughout the diplomatic world, and Russian autocracy is not in harmony with British commercialism and open ports for English merchantmen. In other words, Russia's future at home and abroad will be, if it has not already been, determined by British statesmen, fully seconded by the Washington Government. Before the year is out, even Germany will recognize the leadership of the Anglo-

Saxon in humanity's march toward higher levels of civilization under the flag of free schools and reciprocal trade relations the world over.

PRACTICAL CLUB WOMEN.

Well-directed and amiable insistence on the part of the practical club women of this, as well as other cities, is accomplishing more than the public is cognizant of, and is accentuating the contention that every Government has considerable "housekeeping" to be done, and that women can do it better than men. One of the best recent exemplifications of this condition of affairs was recorded at the annual meeting of the California Club, when yearly reports were made and passed over without much crowing on the part of the members who have brought important projects to successful issues. To say the co-operation of women is needed in the city or any Government is no reflection upon the men. They simply have not time to attend to the incalculable number of things that make for the future welfare of the city and its citizens, the things which busy people "put off."

All of which is apropos of the modest statement made at the recent annual meeting of the California Club by Dr. Dorothea Moore, chairman of the Juvenile Court Committee, that the finance committee of the Board of Supervisors has set aside $5,000 for the maintenance of a Detention Home.

About eight years ago, a woman, working alone, a Mrs. Laura Bates, secured a number of important reforms, notable among which was the segregation in the Hall of Justice of the men and women criminals and the girl and boy offenders. Since that time Dr. Dorothea Moore, with the organization of the California Club back of her, set on foot the movement that resulted in the establishment of the Juvenile Court, which will do more for the saving of young citizens than any influence now abroad in the land. The Juvenile Court cannot do its best work without the supplementary Detention Home, a place where the children will be kept pending trial. The law which brought the Juvenile Court into life made no provision for the support of the Juvenile Court, because the club women were willing to assume that responsibility, to leave the way clear for the passage of the bill, and to keep the administration of the court out of politics. The money used for its support is raised by the California Club, the Associated Charities, the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, the Youth's Directory, Boys and Girls' Aid Society and the Church Home for Boys. A provision of the law, however, says that the city shall provide a suitable place for the detention of the delinquent children. When the representatives of the committee representing the above-named organizations went to the city officials, the basement of the City Hall was offered for a Detention Home—a place long ago considered unfit and unsanitary for a prison. The men in authority saw the force of the argument advanced, and straightway made the necessary appropriation. With faith in getting the amount of money named for this use, the committee made a successful quest for a house. It is a short distance from the City Hall. Another department of the club is having a bill drawn up that will be presented at the next session of the Legislature asking for the establishment of a State sanatorium for early-stage consumptives. These are but a few of the movements which this club is putting forward.

Side by side with this is the endeavor of the committee of society women who have an informal organization for the help of the City and County Hospital. They secured an additional $5,000 for stated necessities. All of which must be rather interesting data to the women who contend that they will never accomplish anything without the ballot.

The season has opened, and the festive stage driver gets in his work on the tenderfoot in the mountain resorts. The Skaggs Springs stage, running from Geyserville to Skaggs, furnishes an example of the reckless Jehu. There is a youth of tender years handling the ribbons over the fiery steeds who convey pleasure seekers to the mountain hostelry. This boy is remarkable for the ease with which he just misses leaving the road, and at times he succeeds in giving the temporary guests in his conveyance an excruciating thrill as he rounds the curves on the edge of a precipice, while he demurely rolls a cigarette, meanwhile holding the lines between his knees. There is likely to be a dull, sickening discharge when the first load of passengers makes its complaint about this interesting youth. He would be worth his weight in gold in a Wild West show, but as driver for a summer resort stage he is not a monumental success.

Eugene Debs should be immediately arrested for treason and inciting to rebellion, and his telegram to the Western Federation of Labor should be used as evidence against him

Mr. R. H. Pease is a new man among automobile owners. He took a ride down to Haywards last Sunday in his White Steamer, which he is already handling like a veteran. Among the owners of White touring cars, who made the trip to Monterey on the run week before last, were Mr. John D. Spreckels in his White car and Miss Grace D. Spreckels in hers. Mr. John H. Spring took both of his White cars on this trip.

The following physicians are using Pierce cars in their practice: Dr. Ward, Pierce Arrow; Dr. Stinson, Pierce Arrow; Dr. Kelley, Pierce Stanhope; Dr. Rykfogel, Pierce Stanhope. The Pierce automobiles have proven themselves to be the ideal car for physicians' work.

Mr. R. C. Kirkwood of San Jose, accompanied by his wife, daughter and chauffeur, drove the new 1904 Winton touring car from San Jose to Pacific Grove Saturday night. Notwithstanding the darkness, they left San Jose at eleven p. m., and arrived in Pacific Grove at four a. m. Mr. Kirkwood took a run over to the Hotel Del Monte Sunday morning and remained there most of the day, returning home Sunday evening.

Mr. W. B. Glidden and family ran down to San Jose last Sunday in their White touring car.

Mr. E. J. Carpenter purchased a Pierce Arrow touring car, and made his initial trip to Los Angeles on Sunday.

Mr. G. E. Scates of Waterville, Maine, has been visiting San Francisco for the past two weeks. While in this city, Mr. Scates purchased a Stevens-Duryea machine from the Pioneer Automobile Company, and in company with his wife, left here last Saturday morning for a trip across the Continent in his new Duryea.

Mrs. Robert Louis Stevens left for San Jose and Santa Cruz last Sunday in her White touring car. She expects to spend some little time in Santa Cruz and make numerous short runs from that point in her car.

Mr. W. F. Hunt, accompanied by his wife and daughter, made a trip to San Jose on Sunday last in Mr. Hunt's new Oldsmobile light tonneau touring car. This machine is the talk of the town, and admired by all who see it.

Mr. E. B. Stone, who has recently purchased a White touring car, gave a barbecue at his ranch in Alameda County last Sunday. He took a party of friends down in his White car, and Mr. L. P. Lowe in his White Steamer was among those who went along to the feast. Mr. Lowe also took his gasoline car, which was run by his chauffeur, Mr. Dingley.

Mr. Heber C. Tilden has just placed an order for a four-cylinder Great Arrow, which will be delivered about the 1st of August.

BY THE AUTOCAR

The Automobile Club of California is making preparations for an endurance race to Los Angeles and return to take place during the first part of July. This proposition seems like the loss of good time and energy on the part of the officers of the local club. Nothing can be gained from such an event. It is not an affair that should be taken up by a club with a personnel such as that of the Automobile Club of California. Endurance contests are strictly a business affair, in which the staying powers of the autos are tested, and therefore should be confined to the dealers. From an event such as proposed by the club where both amateurs and professionals may compete, the inexperience of some of the former may bring results which will be an injustice to every one.

Endurance contests, where started in the East by some of the dealers as a source of advertising, and where every machine is handled by competent men, it is a good exhibition for the prospective buyer, but under the conditions of the local kind every make of automobile entered runs the risk of receiving a bad reputation, which, although no fault of the machine, may take years to live down.

To the majority of the members of the club, an endurance run has no attraction. In the first place, the distance is so far that most of the owners have not the time to spare to make it. And then, again, who is there who wants to undergo the strain of racing such a distance.

The officers of the club should take warning from the "handwriting on the wall," that has appeared in other sports. Yachting and bicycling are shining examples.

Cut out the racing except once a year, and give up the time to moderate runs, where all may participate, and better results will be accomplished.

The greatest success is only to be had where the great number take part. Therefore if racing is nurtured at the expense of the touring man, he will cease to be a staunch supporter of the club, and will soon use his time and money for his own personal pleasure in a selfish way without a thought of his fellow automobilists.

This should be guarded against, for at the present time we cannot have too much enthusiasm. The work before the Automobile Club of California is something gigantic, if it proposes to be the leading spirit in the sport in the State. It has got to accomplish just legislation and good roads.

These are endless propositions, and ones which the club has got to handle. Endurance tests will not help either, but short to near-by places, with one hour's discussion at the rendezvous concerning the work to be accomplished, and that which has been achieved will be of more service than all the fancy tests and races.

Tests should be handled by the trade and the races by the professionals. The amateur has no place in either.

Record from Del Monte to Oakland 5 hours and 38 minutes. The only successful tour of the Yosemite made by Major Fulmer of Los Angeles and a party of three.

Mrs. C. S. Middleton and party around the city.
Mrs. P. E. Bowles of Oakland made a century.
Mrs. Miles T. Baird did the Park and Presidio.

The Orient Buckboard owners who were out were:
Mr. and Mrs. P. W. Muller of Oakland made a trip to San Jose.

Mr. Broadbent went to the bike races.
Dr. Kellogg and wife made a run to Haywards.

A very spectacular race was run last Saturday afternoon at Ingleside Track at the meet of the Public Schools' Athletic League. There were some twelve or fifteen thousand spectators present, including the Mayor and most of the public officers of this city.

The race was between two Wintons—that of Mr John T. Breuner, driven by Mr. S. Hewson, President of the Chauffeurs' Association, and the other car was one of Messrs. Scott & Blakeslee's best renting machines, and was driven by Mr. Max L. Rosenfeld, vice-president of the Pioneer Automobile Co.

His Honor, the Mayor, occupied a prominent seat in Mr. Breuner's new Winton touring car, while Tom Boyle, of the Board of Education, sat behind Mr. Rosenfeld.

The distance run was three miles. The start was a very even one, but Mr. Rosenfeld's machine soon forged ahead, and led by a quarter of a mile at the end of the second lap. He then slowed down and let the Mayor pass, catching up and passing them again on the back stretch. On the last turn into the home stretch he slowed down to let the Chief Executive win, making it a very pretty race, and Mr. Breuner's machine (with the Mayor in) winning by a length at the tape.

This race was a splendid exhibition of the wonderful control a good operator has over these big, powerful machines.

New Yorkers entering Philadelphia via the Camden ferry are invariably amused by the rules of the ferry company, which require that the engine be stopped outside, all lights be put out, and that the car be pushed on and off the ferryboat. Recently a White steamer crossed the ferry supposedly with all lights out, and when on the Philadelphia side quickly flew off the ferryboat, much to the mystification of the ferrymen, who could not see that the torch had been left burning. In the same way, H. B. Joy with a Packard Model L simply threw in his switch and the engine started without cranking, carrying the car up the incline and off the ferryboat very quickly.

A serious and growing criminal problem has arisen in the New York boroughs of Manhattan and Brooklyn within the past two or three weeks, in the development of an automobile stoning epidemic, which is becoming very menacing to those machines and their occupants. Some Brooklyn people are so wrought up over it that they are talking of "a psychological impulse of a very contagious and dangerous character" and "class hatred." "The poor people are angry and resentful at the rich simply because they are rich," they say, "and think they can throw things at automobiles with impunity."

Mr. Shanks has been visiting his various agencies, and on his way East he stopped at St. Louis a few days to visit the Exposition. Mr. Shanks advised that the interest taken in automobiles at the Exposition is greater than that of any one other industry. He said that the American exhibits at the Fair show very plainly the advance being made in the manufacture of automobiles in this country. We are now building machines of all classes equal to any of the high-priced French cars. This trip was Mr. Shanks' first visit to San Francisco since the Pioneer Automobile Company moved into their new place. He was more than delighted with the new garage, and with the business these agents are doing. Mr. Shanks left on Sunday morning for Cleveland, and will make stops at Salt Lake City, Denver, Omaha and other points en route.

Mr. Edson Bradbury and his grandmother, Mrs. A. E. May, went to Niles last week, and report a very delightful trip.

Mr. and Mrs. William Koenig made a run around the bay Sunday.

Mr. Frank S. Johnson, of San Rafael, although only an owner of a machine for a short time, has made several long runs. It is safe to say that he is the most enthusiastic and untiring driver on the Coast. There is scarcely any one in his locality who has not enjoyed his hospitality on some of these runs.

AFTERMATH.

By Thos. Josia Garrison in Scribner's

When I am old and very tired,
 A presence near the chimney-place,
 With folded hands and quiet face,
 Loving no more, no more desired,

 God grant one memory to me
 Shall, ghost-like, waver through the gloom,
 And silent in a silent room
 Come near to bear me company.

And those who pass perchance shall smile
 With wondering eyes upon me bent.
 "How still she sits, in what content,
 Who lingers yet a little while."

They shall not guess, those over-wise,
 How through the calm content of me
 The face of that mad memory
 Leans close and smiles within my eyes,

Until I feel in very truth
 The girl-heart thrilling in my breast,
 What time upon my own are pressed
 The passionate, warm lips of Youth.

And they shall pity who but see
 Dead ashes where the flames were bold,
 A woman sad and very old
 Who sits in silence patiently.

LINES ON THE FUTURE OF ENGLISH SONG.

By Margaret Fuller in Century

They first who saw the day grow wan and die,
 Gessed they at all that night in turn would go,
 Or felt they aught but wonderment and woe,
 Our rude foreparents, waiting in the shy,
 Strange dusk? What, then, when Song drops out the sky,

Song and the singer who the last shall know
 The greatness of the chosen, and the glow—
 Will then the past have slipped forever by?
 Shall spangled gloom melt in the rush of morn,
 Light follow night, unlesened for the dark,
 One sun eclipse all stars and the borrowing moon;
 And yet shall not the hedge-row hush and swoon,
 And earth and heaven in ecstasy be torn While 'twixt their hearts once more upsoars the lark?

THE PASSION-FLOWER.

My love gave me a passion-flower.
 I nursed it well—so brief its hour!
 My eyelids ache, my throat is dry:
 He told me not that it would die.

My love and I are one, and yet
 Full oft my cheeks with tears are wet—
 So sweet the night is, and the bower!
 My love gave me a passion-flower.

So sweet! Hold fast my hands. Can God
 Make all this joy revert to sod,
 And leave to me but this for dower—
 My love gave me a passion-flower!

INSURANCE

Robert H. Plant, the Georgia banker who recently killed himself after his two banks had been placed in the hands of receivers, carried the following life insurance: New York Life, $500,000; Equitable Life, $115,000; Mutual Life, $100,000; Penn Mutual, $86,000; Union Mutual, $50,000; Massachusetts Mutual, $50,000; Home Life, $50,000; Washington Life, $30,000; Manhattan Life, $20,000; Mutual Benefit, $20,000; total, $1,015,000.

Elwood Atkinson says the first lesson to be learned from the Baltimore fire is that in the bright lexicon of fire insurance there is no such word as "fire proof."

The Equitable Building at Baltimore, which was insured for $700,000, yielded a salvage of seven per cent.

The Exchange Fire of Chicago is a new one. It has a Virginia charter, and a reported capital of $100,000.

The Insurance Press has published its annual edition containing tabulated lists of life insurance payments. The payments in the larger cities of the United States are as follows: New York, $25,386,492; Philadelphia, $9,348,297; Chicago, $8,630,245; Brooklyn, $7,405,896; Boston, $6,400,038; Baltimore, $4,003,280; St. Louis, $3,801,402; Cincinnati, $3,696,114; Pittsburg, $2,731,678; Buffalo, $2,123,506; Cleveland, $2,120,660; San Francisco, $2,054,960; Detroit, $2,006,845.

The basis rate in Western Union territory new schedule for a brick or stone building occupied as an educational institution is 50 cents, except that in Ohio it is 40 cents, in Missouri 60, and in Kentucky and Tennessee 65. These basis rates are increased 10 cents when the risk is in a town without fire protection. Deductions are provided for the use of the co-insurance clause. For fireproof construction a deduction of 30 per cent is allowed. Fifteen cents is charged for dormitory occupancy, and 10 cents for a laboratory.

Louisville, Kentucky, is to have a new life company, with a capital of $200,000. These Kentuckians must be gritty fellows to try to organize and manage successfully any company emanating from that city. It has been a hoodoo so far to about all the companies that ever were born there, and, worse, the new one is to be named the Commonwealth.

Eastern exchanges are publishing the rumor that since the resignation of George W. Turner, manager of the Northwestern, the company is likely to abandon this field, citing as the reason the recent sweeping destructions of its lines in this section. This is hardly to be expected, for the company had, under Mr. Turner's management, too large and profitable a business.

The South Dakota Mutual has made an assessment of 80 per cent on its premium notes. This is the way to do it. The Mutual company that goes easy on its victims may last a little longer, but the promoters do not "get rich quick."

The Turner & Thompson's four Lloyds, operated from Chicago, are in the hands of a receiver at the solicitation of Mr. Farmer himself. He alleged the concerns insolvent, with liabilities of some $60,000 in excess of assets.

The report of the National Fire Protection Committee on the Baltimore fire, which, by common consent of the companies, was referred to, has been made public. quality is the most satisfactory fire-resistive material now used in building construction.

Stone of any kind should be classed as fragile and specially susceptible to damage when exposed to severe heat. From a fire protection standpoint it is unsuitable both for wall and pier construction and for exterior or interior finish.

All structural metal work must be properly protected so as to withstand successfully the effects of severe heat.

Hollow terra cotta tile, as ordinarily used as a fire protective covering for columns, lacks stability and breaks when exposed to heat.

Well-burned ordinary brick, of good quality, properly laid in cement mortar, is the best material now in use as a fire protective covering for steel or iron columns. This material combines rigid construction and the necessary fire-resistive qualities.

Plaster blocks and plaster on metal laths are unsatisfactory for use as a fire-protective covering for columns or other structural metal work.

Terra cotta tile for floor arches is defective, as the lower web breaks off under severe heat. This apparently is true of all grades of tile.

Floor surfaces should be of non-combustible materials.

Large, unbroken floor areas assist the spread of fire and serve to augment its severity. Such buildings should be subdivided by substantial brick fire walls.

All room partitions, as ordinarily constructed of hollow tile, plaster blocks, metal lath and plaster, or similar materials, are readily destroyed by a severe fire.

Vertical openings throughout buildings, as for stairs and elevators, rapidly communicate fire to all stories. All such floor openings should be enclosed in brick walled shafts, crowned by a thin glass skylight. Uninclosed vertical openings are largely responsible for the large loss of life and property by fire. This should be rectified in existing buildings, as well as those hereafter constructed, and municipal building laws and insurance discrimination should be invoked to this end.

Good construction should be enforced in all details. Inspection of fire-resistive buildings in course of construction should be more frequent than for buildings of ordinary construction.

Fire-resistive buildings with inflammable contents and numerous wall openings are ineffectual as conflagration stops. Solid brick walls should be provided wherever possible, and where openings are necessary they should be as small and infrequent as possible, and equipped with proper protection against fire.

The contents of a fire-resistive building, without proper subdivision and with no adequate protection against exposure fires, are scarcely any safer as regards destruction by fire than if contained in a building of ordinary construction.

Labor Unions and Their Follies

Attempts at Violence.

Every few days there is a report of some man, who, because of his desire to be independent and having accepted a position in an open-shop stable, restaurant, shoe factory or other place of employment, has been assaulted by union thugs. A few of these cases have been serious, and all evidence goes to show that they intend to punish these men for their temerity and to intimidate other men who might follow their example. Their crimes are deliberate, cold-blooded assaults, whether they mean actually to kill their victims or only to maim them. It is not conceivable that one man should be beaten and seriously injured on the streets of a populous city without leaving a broad trace to the thugs. In any circumstances it would be the obvious duty of the police to follow it vigorously until every man concerned is apprehended. The police should be stimulated to extraordinary activity as a warning to other sympathizers with the strikers, who have shown a disposition to commit similar outrages.

Crimes of this character are too often treated in all parts of this country as lynchings are in most parts of the South. Instead of regarding them as peculiarly heinous, they are frequently looked upon as in some degree venal, the passions which inspire them being considered in a way impersonal because they are found in mobs rather than individuals. For this view there is, of course, no sound excuse, unless palliation can be found in the indulgent attitude of authorities that allows lawless characters to believe that they will not be held to strict account.

The Labor Union of the Past and the Employers' Union of To-day.

In the past the struggle has been between organized labor and unorganized employers, but the latter have at last taken a leaf out of the book of their opponents and have learned that organization must be fought by organization, and that labor unionism must be brought to terms by employer unionism. The employers of the country have been slow to learn that lesson, but they apparently have learned it at last, and now they are putting it into practice. The Citizens' Alliance is the result. It is the union of employers, only, being less unreasonable than its opponent, it does not demand that wage earners should not belong to unions, but only that they should not be forced to belong, and that unions shall not attempt to deprive employers of their just rights and equitable privileges.

In the past, unionism has had only isolated employers to fight. Its boycott against a restaurant, a mill or store in future, will have to fight an entire class of business; and it will have to meet a sympathetic lockout, as in the past employers have had to meet sympathetic strikes. Employers propose in future to stand together and assist each other, in the same way that labor has been doing. It is a case of fighting fire with fire.

Labor Union Grafters.

It is said the history of the influences which precipitate the average labor strike shows that not more than fifteen per cent of the total number in interest are the real evil force at work. That is to say, fifteen per cent want an excuse for living in idleness, and they are forever making mountains out of mole-hills. Their chief end in life is to poison the minds of their fellow-workmen against their employer. Fifty per cent would prefer that matters remain undisturbed, but they are misled by the spectacular oratory of the fifteen per cent, reinforced by the walking delegates, and the remaining thirty-five per cent are conservative, thinking and sober-minded men who carefully count the cost of a strike, and who in their analysis of the conditions of their employment place the employer's rights and interests alongside of their own. It is the thirty-five per cent that battles for conferences and arbitration—any honorable thing to avert a strike. But if a strike is ordered they acquiesce because of a foolish sentimentality which is born of an erroneous conception of what true loyalty of their union is; nor is it easy to make them see that they are plunged into the misfortune of loss of time and wages by not more than fifteen per cent of their number, and that that small minority represents the lazy, the indolent and the irresponsible element of the labor union, yet it rules it with an iron rod. Will sensible unionists never awaken to these facts and act as manly men should act?

The Walking Delegate to Blame.

Labor has no one to blame but its leaders, and its blind permission to them to do as they please for this result. The vast majority of the American people believed, and yet believe not only in the right of labor to organize, but that it is a good thing, because it improves the condition of the wage earner if not carried to extremes, and the better housed and clothed and fed that the wage earner is, the better for the whole country, the more prosperous the whole community; no thinking man denies that, and so long as the demands of labor were reasonable they were met with by most employers, and everywhere had public sympathy to back them. But the trouble has been that the leaders were selfish men, who only had a few ideas, the principal one of which was their own aggrandizement, and as a result, instead of helping the wage-earner to improve himself mentally and morally and intellectually when he had won for himself shorter working hours, and consequently more time for self-improvement, and larger wages, with their resulting possible improvement in social conditions, the leaders have kept on along the same lines, urging higher wages and less work, and stirring up class hatred and personal animosity between employer and employee, until to-day thousands of men hate each other, who before were the best of friends and the closest of fellow-citizens.

Treason to the Government.

Treason has been taught from union platforms; we have been told that the American workman is a slave, whereas he is the most prosperous laborer on the face of the earth; his fellow-workers from all over Europe come here to study his prosperity. Men who were not even citizens of the United States have urged young Americans to refrain from entering the public service of their country, whether in the militia, the army or the navy; the youth of the country has been taught that private ownership of property is robbery, and that the extension of American trade should be discouraged because it does not benefit labor, a falsehood on its face. Americans have been denied the right to learn a trade, but the foreigners have been welcomed into unions with open arms.

The American system of education, especially technical schools, which are exciting the admiration of the world, and which Englishmen and Frenchmen and Germans have come here by the hundreds to study, have been opposed, and American workmen who desire to change their residence have been prevented from making a living in their new home because their trade was closed to them by some hide-bound trade union. It is against all this anti-Americanism, it is against this trampling of the flag into the gutter by those who know nothing of its meaning, that the opposition to unionism in our midst is aimed. Behind the opposition is the entire sentiment of the community—or at least of that part which believes that America should be run on American principles. There is no opposition to organized labor. Every workman has a right to belong to a labor organization just as much as he has a right to be a Methodist or a Catholic, a Mason or an Odd Fellow, a Republican or a Democrat, but he has no right to force his neighbor to join his church, his society or his political party under pain of being deprived of the means of making a living—he has no right to say you must join my union or starve. That is the issue.

A Trade Union Decision.

The Appellate Court of Illinois has rendered a very important decision. It seems that the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and of the International Association of Mechanics of the Brass Workers Union and the Brass Molders Local Union demanded that a certain company should execute an agreement that they would employ none but members of these organizations; that each craft should appoint a steward in the factory to see that the men working in it belonged to the organizations; that the business agent of the unions should have the privilege of interviewing any workmen in the factory during business hours; that the apprentices should belong to the union, but should not exceed one for ten workmen, and that a sympathetic strike should not be considered a violation of the agreement. In other words, to make the shop a "closed shop."

The Appellate Court held that the agreement in question was unlawful; that it struck at the right of contract and discrimination in favor of one class of men and excluded all others and was a violation of the Constitution of Illinois and of the United States; that such agreement would, if executed, tend to create a monopoly in favor of the members of the different unions to the exclusion of workmen not members of such unions and was in this respect also unlawful. It was also in violation of the criminal law against conspiracies. That the action of the unions in seeking to compel the execution of the contract by the said company constituted duress, which made the contract voidable if it had been executed. That such action constituted a criminal conspiracy, and that each conspirator was responsible for the acts and declarations of every other conspirator made in furtherance of the common purpose.

This is certainly a just decision, and we hope the Citizens' Alliance will see to it that all agreements of its kind are discouraged. This should be done in the interests of those who are not members of unions.

It is not always possible for men to join a union even if willing. The doors of the union are barred in many instances, and the right to work is denied many a deserving man because of the tyranny of the walking delegate.

The Authors' Haven

By Lady Algý.

California poets and authors realize that the native muse has geographical preferences that cannot be lightly overlooked. There is no doubt that the muse is kindest when her lovers court her in the little nooks nestling in the elbow of Sonoma Creek just below Glen Ellen. For it was here, in the old Osbourn home sitting snugly on a wooded hill, that Robert Louis Stevenson wrote some of his best tales; here, too, Jack London wrote the book that clinched his fame; and Stirling, latest of California poets, found the inspiration here for his "Testimony of the Suns."

It is only fitting and proper that so much of the best literary output of California should flower in this spot, for 'twas here that a sister experiment of the Brooke farm was tried. Like Emerson's dream of a demesne for mental aristocrats, the colony soon scattered, but their influence is still keenly felt. Mrs. Ninetta Ames, the well known magazine writer, has kept their memory green on her beautiful place known as "Wake Robin Lodge," and here every year a little coterie of writers and artists come to shake off the grime of the city and get close to nature in one of her prettiest moods. For the scenery about the lodge is the pleasing, restful sort that does not too much distract the mind like the stirring granite splendor of the Sierras. Where Sonoma Creek comes mincing down like a coquettish maiden to keep its tryst with impetuous Graham Creek, Mrs. Ames has built "Wake Robin Lodge." A sweep of ten acres cuts it off from the Sunday picnicker who frequently hies to Glen Ellen. In this ten-acre park Mrs. Ames has planted every variety of California wild flower, and in this one spot, at least, the wild flora of the State is safe from vandalism. Cultivated flowers, too, of every variety are coaxed into perfection of bloom here. The roses at "Wake Robin Lodge" are famous among horticulturists. But the wild beauty of the place has not been prettied over as is so frequently the case. The spot that is reserved for Jack London's sanctuary is a rustic bit down by the brim of Sonoma Creek. Under a leafy roof of overhanging boughs stands the table where he writes. A wire clothes line stretched between the trees over the table is used for Mr. London's literary washing. Jack London's methods are as original as the man himself. When he gets ready to write a story or book that has been shaping in his mind, he sifts out all the notes pertinent to the tale, and with wire clothes pins fastens them on the line. To see these rag-tags and bob-ends of paper fluttering in the breeze, the passer-by would not fancy that they contained the data of months of hard work. When London hurried to Japan, he had to part a story he was writing in the middle, and he left out a line full of this literary wash which some one else fortunately took in before the rain had a chance to blur the invaluable notes.

Two books are at present being published off for the publishers at "Wake Robin Lodge." Mrs. Ames' new book, "Deseret," will be published by the Century Company. It is a story with a flavor of Mormonism, as the title of the book implies. Mrs. Ames has lived many years among the much-married Saints, so the story ought to ring true, and coming at a moment when all eyes have been trained toward Zion, the story ought to find a hungry reading public. Edward B. Payne, whose children's stories in St. Nicholas have earned him a reputation in the field of juvenile literature, spends most of his time at Wake Robin Lodge, and is at present finishing his "Night-cap Stories," which St. Nicholas is to publish.

"Wake Robin Lodge" should really be spelled plural number. For there are a half-dozen little lodges scattered over the ten acres, so that guests may come and guests may go, but privacy is never destroyed. George Stirling, Jack London, Harry Culmer, the artist, and the others who seek their inspiration here, each have their own roof top—it may be of canvas, or rustic, where no one else ventures during working hours.

It is pleasant to dwell upon the fact that so close to San Francisco's stir and strife is a preserve where the literary elect may get so close to the heart of nature that you can hear it beat in their written pages.

PROVERBS.

The destructive man is usually so by reason of his lack of ability and character to be conservative.

Alleviating the pain is no excuse for having inflicted the wound.

Neatness of attire is frequently a mask concealing the disorder of the character.

Force of expression is never indelicate.

You must have some instant and imperative demand in order to call out the heroic qualities of mankind.

Envy, and the knowledge of the lack of personal power, will usually be found to be the basis of unjust criticism.

UNIONISM ON THE WANE IN LOS ANGELES.

The Labor Arbiter of Los Angeles says: "The boycott and every form of tyranny and lawlessness committed in the name of labor will no longer be tolerated in this city. The public has declared it, and the public is the judge. The practice of any one of these outrages operates to the detriment of labor and to the benefit of the one the outrage is attempted upon. Labor conditions in Los Angeles at the present time are unfavorable to the union man, and will continue to be until the unions rid themselves of the professional boycotter, the professional agitator and the ignorant firebrand.

"During the past year several unions have gone out of existence, and others are on the wane as the result of the operations of the agitators. Non-union men are in demand everywhere for permanent positions at high wages, and are receiving every encouragement."

This sounds well for Los Angeles. Since the first of the year the Citizens' Alliance of San Francisco has proven to not a few unions the folly of boycotts and strikes. The Carmen, Shoemakers, Teamsters, Stablemen, Drug Clerks, Retail Clerks, Waiters and several smaller affairs have suffered and lost. To be boycotted in San Francisco means success for the merchant.

Can any one point to a single benefit that has accrued to either labor or capital by any act of a labor union, barring the Typographical and a half-dozen organizations? On the contrary, the wrecks that labor unions have wrought in family and social and industrial life are seen in every channel of the country's being.

The Political Situation

The delegates to the Democratic Convention have met and assessed themselves $150 for delegates-at-large, and half that amount for district delegates and alternates. That does not include their fare, and it is announced that the money will be used for expenses of the delegation, for food and sleeping accommodations. Just why a delegate-at-large should eat twice as much or sleep twice as long as a district delegate, I confess my inability to see. It is true that Tarpey is a heavy-weight, and that Carmichael has also a rotund form, and even Delmas is fond of good living, but so are the other delegates and big people, in the sense of avoirdupois, are not necessarily heavy eaters. Why should M. F. Tarpey eat twice as much as A. B. Tarpey? Or why is Delmas supposed to be so much heavier a feeder than Lou Moosier?

As announced before, the Hearst train is to pick up delegates from all the States this side of the Missouri, and by the time the party gets to St. Louis it will number several hundreds if the plans now on the tapis are carried out. It is not going to be the special that was originally proposed. It is going to be simply a train for St. Louis, and the delegates, I am told, will have to pay their own expenses, and that while the other delegations will join the party en route, that is a railroad and not a Hearst arrangement. In other words, the railroad company runs a train from San Francisco to St. Louis, and any delegate who has the price can get on, regardless of his enthusiasm for Hearst or Judge Parker, or any one else. There will be two carloads of California edibles and drinkables, in the proportion of one-half a car of the former to one and one-half car of the latter, and the California delegation hope that after the Washingtonians and the Webfooters, and the Coeur d'Alenens and the Mormons, and the Cowboys and the Sunflowers, from Oregon, Idaho, Utah, Wyoming, Colorado and Kansas, have partaken of the concoctions that emanate from our smiling valleys and beautiful hills, they will all be converted to the Native Son, whose badge, designed by artist Tarpey, each of them is to wear.

Although the admirers of Hearst are claiming that it is the first chance that Californians have ever had to support a Californian, the truth is that California furnished the Republican party with its first Presidential candidate in the person of General John C. Fremont, who got 1,341,264 popular votes and 114 electoral votes. That was in 1856. Twenty-four years later, the delegation from this State to the Democratic National Convention proposed the name of Justice Field, and he received considerable support for the nomination. It is true that neither Fremont nor Field were Native Sons, but they were as much identified with the State and its history as though they had been. Fremont probably got as many electoral votes fifty years ago as Hearst will get in the convention this year.

Everybody was immensely amused at the row between ex-Governor Budd and Manager Tarpey in the Palace Grill last week. Tarpey, it appears, was smarting under Budd's very just criticism of his mismanagement of affairs at Santa Cruz. I do not know what Budd has been saying about Tarpey, but he could not have said anything too strongly, for Tarpey is the greatest political fake that even Hearst has resurrected. The entire press of the State has pointed out his folly in throwing a practically unanimous endorsement of his employer for an empty honor, which has been proclaimed from one end of the country to the other as the defeat it really was.

Caminetti, who was promised the support of the Examiner in his candidacy for Congress in the First District, does not find that help as potent as he thought it would be. The anti-Hearst faction are busy hunting up a candidate to run against him, just as they brought out the Madera judge to shut off Mark Plaisted's Congressional aspirations in the Sixth District. There are a number of possible candidates talked about, but the most likely one is said to be from Humboldt.

In the Second District, Glenn County has endorsed McKinley, and he is as certain of the Republican nomination as Bell is of the Democratic. In the Eighth District, it looks now as if Smith of Bakersfield would win out, as San Luis Obispo and several other counties have endorsed him, and his only competitor of any importance is Senator Ward of San Diego, who has only his own vote and Orange County to count on.

It is very evident that unless some new Richmond appears that Henry Oxnard will have very little more trouble in reaching the Senate next winter than Perkins had last session of the Legislature. Bard's candidacy really amounts to nothing, and the efforts of John W. Mitchell, a Democrat, to force Jim Lankersheim of Los Angeles on the party, or the still more ridiculous efforts of General Otis to secure the toga for that conspicuous Congressional failure, Walters, also of Los Angeles, are not worth bothering about. If the Senator must come from the South, Oxnard to-day is the only candidate worth discussing, though if it were a question of men and not localities it might be different.

It is very evident that the senior Senator does not think that Bard has a ghost of a chance, and that he is not shedding any tears over that fact, for he has been seen around with Oxnard a good deal lately, and it is understood will do all he can to help that gentleman realize his ambitions. So far the only friends of Bard who have made themselves at all conspicuous are Dr. Rowell, of Fresno, for whom Bard tried to get half a dozen places and fell down each time; Cutter, of Yuba County, who has just been deposed as Chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, and Bulla of Los Angeles, who got three votes out of some seventy odd for delegate-at-large to Chicago. With those gentlemen active in his interests, Bard should have no trouble in staying at home after the 4th of March, 1905.

The choice of General Stone to manage the campaign this year is a good one. He is active, knows every one, and undoubtedly will make a success of his work. The Democrats cannot tell who to get to manage their campaign until they know who their candidate will be, but in any case if they want to make any showing at all, they should see to it that it is not Tarpey.

GOOD WORK.

The Evening Post is the only daily newspaper in San Francisco that is making an open campaign against that fungoid growth on civilization, the labor union. The course of the Post is to be commended, and if the merchants of this city are duly grateful, there should be an increased patronage in an advertising way.

The only reward the editor of the Evening Post may hope for, if he persists in his manly and commendable course, is in the knowledge of having done the right thing at a time that is critical. He has, as we have, helped maintain the republic when it was threatened by anarchy. He must let that suffice and his reward will come later, when all understand. It is only a question of time when the labor unions will cease covert attacks on the Government, opposition to the flag, attacks on the militia and other hidden acts of treason, and by desperation, be forced into the open. They will then declare themselves for a red flag, for petroleuseism, for anarchy, rapine and murder.

Then the people will rise in their might, then will the public obtain revenge for the unholy alliance existing between labor bosses and the various corporations, against the allied villainies that bleed the people. Then, and not till then, may disinterested efforts to better the condition of mankind, to keep this a nation of free men, expect a reward.

The losses that have thus far accrued to individuals and corporations in the United States by labor strikes aggregate more than double the sum of the national debt, and labor always carries the larger share of such burdens.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA WHIST TOURNAMENT.

The Southern California Whist Association will hold its spring meeting in the parlors of The Potter, Santa Barbara, June 15th, 16th and 17th. The following cities are represented: Los Angeles, Pasadena, Riverside, Pomona, Monrovia, San Bernardino, Santa Paula, Oxnard, Ventura and Santa Barbara. The programme selected by the tournament committee will be as follows:

First Event—Wednesday, June 15, at 2 p. m.: A progressive pair match, open to all whist players, whether members of the association or not. Partners to be selected by each contestant before the play commences, and entries to be made not later than 1:50 p. m.

Second Event—Wednesday, June 15, 8 p. m.: A progressive pair match, open to all whist players, whether members of the association or not. Partners to be selected by each contestant before the play commences, and entries to be made not later than 7:50 p. m.

Third Event—Thursday, June 16: The entire day will be given up to a contest for teams of four for the cup now held by the Los Angeles Club. Each club is limited to one team, and there is a certainty that a dozen teams will take part.

Fourth Event—Friday, June 17: A pair contest afternoon and evening, under the Howell system, for the gold medal now held by a Santa Barbara couple. There is no limit to the number of pairs that may be entered from each club in the Association for this occasion.

These four events will be "mixed," i. e., two ladies, two gentlemen, or a lady and gentleman may play together.

TAXATION WITHOUT BENEFIT.

It is to be presumed that the county of Alameda desires to encourage a growth in its tax paying citizenship. The ring of tax-eating politicians at the head of affairs has arranged it this year so that the citizen of Alameda County cities pays a larger proportion of the city and county and State tax than any citizen in other counties. The resident of the city of Alameda, for instance, pays approximately $1.25 per hundred dollars of personal property valuation, while the State and county tax is approximately $1.35 on the same valuation. There is absolutely no excuse for this excessive taxation, and unless it is levied for the purpose of discouraging people removing from San Francisco across the bay, it should be reduced so as to compare favorably with other sections of California. If the resident of Alameda County enjoyed the same benefits in improvements that are enjoyed in San Francisco, there would be no cause for complaint. As it is, there are some of the very worst roads in the State in Alameda County, and the less said about the condition of the streets of Oakland the better.

Blatant demagogism and rhetorical rubbish are the chief stone of the corner of labor leaders, while the edifice itself is composed mostly of hatred of sober, industrious and frugal living, and the foundation is composed of the brazen cheeks of walking delegates cemented together by the blood of criminal strikes.

—The Techau Tavern is the place to go after the theatre. It tops off the evening splendidly. The refreshments of all sorts are of the best quality and the price is reasonable.

There are 32,800 workmen, mostly skilled labor, out of employment in the United States because and only because walking delegates have purposely disrupted the friendly relations before existing between employers and employees. Will the brains and dignity of labor ever run their own business?

The labor unions of the United States are supporting over 6,000 organizers, business agents and walking delegates, which means a tax of not less than $18,000 a day on the wages of those who work. But they must like it, or they would discharge the vampires.

Rudolph Speck, the financial secretary of the Brewery Drivers' Union, is missing, and so are $4,000 of the union's cash. On the face of this bit of betrayed confidence and theft nothing very startling is observable. Speck is a criminal and a refuge from justice, but is he not merely the effect of a cause—a cause born of an organized conspiracy against the power that feeds labor? Speck is the fruit of the poison weeds in labor's fallow fields.

Andrew Carnegie, lecturing lately to the students of Edinburgh University, said that his aim was to find men who were cleverer than himself, and use them. The sentiment was received with loud applause and laughter by the students; Scotch students who study on porridge and had only ideals to support them. The difference between Carnegie and Mayor Schmitz is obvious. The latter is found by a cleverer man than himself and used by him.

AGAIN COLORADO'S CRIMSON CROWN.

Injustice and crime begets crime and injustice. Colorado, in its haste to overcome the evils of unionism, has adopted, through the Mine Owners' Association, practices that are just as reprehensible as those of the Western Federation of Labor or the Mine Workers' Association. No C. C. Mitchell, no Demolli, or other leader, foreign or renegade American, could bethink himself of more lawless methods than those adopted in Colorado to rid the community of the criminal element who control the mining unions. The News Letter believes in punishment swift, sudden and sure for the miscreants who blew up the depot at Victor, but it does not believe in the wholesale deportation of innocent and hard-working men, simply because they belong to a union.

It can easily be conceived that a community will become enraged at the leaders of a union such as the Western Federation, and that it will seek revenge for the outrages committed by the unions. But it is no excuse for using the very methods practiced by the Federation, in fighting the Federation. There are a large number of men in California to-day who were forced out of the Coeur d'Alene region of Idaho by the unions. From there they went to the Colorado mines, only to find that the unions had marked them tabu, and while the unions had the upper hand these men were forced to leave Colorado.

And now intelligent men, not the low foreign scum that operates the mines, but the owners themselves, associated with merchants, doctors, lawyers and ministers, take the same measures, take the law in their own hands, and deprive freemen of the right to labor and the pursuit of happiness.

No blame can be attached to the military authorities. They are doing their duty, and they are doing it well. It is the civil authorities and the civilian associations who are overstepping the bounds, and they should be called to account by the Governor. Punish the guilty, but spare the innocent. There is enough law in the land and on the statute books to provide punishment for any crime that may be invented by the most cunning and clever labor leader in the land without having recourse to union labor methods. The Republic cannot endure and such practices continue.

THE PEN IS MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD— BUT—

The stream of hot air which nocturnally ascends from the Southern end of Grant avenue was rudely interrupted shortly before midnight Sunday by an appeal to force which nearly resulted in a general riot.

A young Cicero, a well-known frequenter of this wordy region of the city, and a diligent vituperator in the cause of Socialism, found himself getting the worst of a verbal war with a lank and somewhat older Demosthenes with Labor Union affiliations. The arguments were being exchanged in volleys until Cicero's ammunition gave out, and he thought to substitute an epithet. The word he applied to Demosthenes is unprintable, and sounded like a thunderbolt tearing to pieces a hemlock tree. Instantly Demosthenes abandoned argument also, and swung with his good right fist, landing on the other's lower jaw with terrific force. Wounded in his most vital part, Cicero fell, and was only prevented from biting the dust by the fact that he had no teeth in the back of his head. Wild riot ensued, and for a minute Demosthenes seemed to be fighting fifty men at once. But he had secret friends in the crowd who came between him and serious injury, and he managed to slip away. The angel of peace arrived, therefore, before any one was seriously hurt, and of course long before the police arrived upon the scene.

It is the custom for self-appointed orators to collect little crowds and animadvert upon everything in existence night after night in this quarter of the city. Free speech is a sacred institution, but it suffers great abuse, especially when insult and slander of the most personal nature is hurled recklessly at any one who dares to differ in opinion from one of these leather-lunged philosophers. Some night, in answer to a personal insult, some hot-head will draw a revolver, and Grant avenue will look more like Colorado than it did Sunday. Such scenes as are enacted upon the thoroughfare in question between Market street and O'Farrell would not be tolerated in any other city in the Union, and should not be tolerated in San Francisco. Citizens who use the public highways for discussion should be compelled to confine themselves to sane and decent language in the interests of order.

A RAILROAD STRIKE ENDED.

The Santa Fe Railway strike is over, and the "Strike Historian" will put it down as the most dismal failure of this age of strikes. All the strikers are hunting jobs elsewhere, their places having been filled by new men, and as President Ripley laconically observes, "We have better men now than we had before the strike"; besides, the offerings of skilled mechanics are "large enough to stand a new railroad," and the same is true of all lines of labor. The strike was inaugurated by walking delegates without any cause other than a feeling that they would lose their jobs if "something was not done." The machinists were first inveigled into the insane movement, and reinforcements being needed at once, the boiler-makers were persuaded to do the "sympathetic act" by throwing down their tools. Labor undoubtedly has just and honest grievances at times, and occasionally capital refuses to grant to labor its just dues, but always and all the time labor has a just, honest and abiding grievance against that miserable, mischief-making creation of its own—the walking delegate. He should be called "labor's walking fire-brand and wrecker of labor's opportunity for employment." He is labor's worst enemy. He is labor's evil genius. He is labor's Benedict Arnold. He is a black-mailer. He is a snake in labor's hay field.

THE SUCCESS OF THE UNWASHED.

The successful election of a fiddler in San Francisco to the office of Mayor was a great mistake. The people see it now. The election of Livernash to Congress was another mistake. The people see it now. What have these two worthies done that entitles them to the thanks of the public in general? Nothing. What have they done that entitles them to the thanks of the union element and the lawbreakers in this community? Nothing.

It is to this element they owe their election, and yet they have not in any way ameliorated the condition of the poor and lowly, the parasite and the indigent, the union laborer and the agitator. Locally, the only visible improvement is in the Schmitz family. It has acquired sufficient polish to avoid the attention of the health officers. A few of the local labor bosses have learned to wash their necks, and some have stopped combing their hair with their forks. There are a few who occasionally bathe. This improvement, while commendable, is, we fear, only temporary.

The only visible effect of the Livernash success has been that a large number of the insane incarcerated because of homicidal tendencies in the various asylums of the State are giving trouble. They believe the people should give them all recognition and send them to Congress. Summing up the present condition carefully and impartially, while we admit that there is something in the contention to send the insane to Congress, the tendency has been bad and the influence on the public noxious. It has encouraged crime, and, worse than that, the success of the representatives of the uncouth and the unwashed has had the effect of encouraging the Hearst paper. And as the Hearst is the official organ of the vicious element, we must come to the conclusion that the encouragement of crime is the only net result of the election of Schmitz or Livernash.

"THE HOUSE IS YOUR'N."

The Triennial Conclave will bring to San Francisco the greatest body of men that ever have or ever will come to California. The Knights Templar of the United States are a remarkable aggregation of men of brains and intelligence. Nowhere in all the world has the spirit of knighthood been so thoroughly followed to a logical conclusion as in the greatest of all republics. The body was originally founded in a spirit of rivalry in noble deeds, and while to our modern eyes many of the expeditions and doings in the jousts seem but the idle tales of a jongleur, it has remained for the modern Templar to place the deeds of the paladins of old on the basis of practical modernism, and this modernism has meant that the order stands for better citizenship and truer relationship between man and man. The world is better for the Knights Templar.

San Francisco will do its utmost to welcome the gentlemen who wander to California from the rock-ribbed shores of Maine or the codfish banks of Massachusetts. It will extend the arms of welcome to the Knight of the Carolinas and the Templar from Tennessee, and from wherever he may come, from the farthest shores of Florida or Hawaii's hula groves, he may rest assured his reception will be markedly courteous and warm.

The Knights are all men of means and manners, and with the old Californian hospitality we stretch our hands to the four winds of heaven and bid ye welcome. "The house is your'n."

THE FEUD BETWEEN THE SCHMITZES AND THE SMITHSES.

The directory says that there are 1320 Smiths in San Francisco. It's a mighty good thing for our Mayor that his is the German "Schmitz" branch of the family, or he would bankrupt the city by his perfect system of nepotism. Some say that in his early youth he changed his name from "Schnitz" to Schmitz. Schnitz means small, and unkind folks used to say that the name was particularly fitting. The Mayor has taken a particular dislike to all that bear the name of Smith, and it is said he has vowed never to countenance the employment of any man by that name. This is given as the secret reason for the discharge of the dairy inspector. The Smiths have the strength of numbers, however, and it is probable that in the long run they will outvote and in other ways outnumber the Schmitz tribe. There is one thing the Smiths cannot do. No matter how great their numbers, they will never be able to hold as many offices nor provide for as many poor relations as the Schmitzes.

IGNORANT MISREPRESENTATION.

Mr. Ion Perdicaris, whose capture by brigands has made quite an international stir, has been the victim of so much ignorant misrepresentation at the hands of the press that a few words of correction are necessary. He is an American by birth, and a man of great wealth and refinement. He is a friend of many of the most prominent intellectual people in the European world of letters, and is known everywhere for his extreme generosity to Americans in distress. It is the second time that he has been arrested, the first time being for his efforts to stamp out the notorious protege system in Morocco. He has always defended the Mahommedans against the extortions of both Christians and Jews, and it is very strange to find that he is held by a Mahommedan chief, Raisuli, who is in revolt against the Sultan of Morocco, and has taken this means of securing funds. With him is his stepson, Mr. Cromwell Varley, a descendant of Oliver Cromwell. Mr. Perdicaris is well known as a philanthropist, and his efforts to secure the release of Moors who have been imprisoned by usurers acting under the protection of the American flag, have gained for him a great reputation among the people, which accounts for the kindness with which he is being treated. That Raisuli does not always show such consideration is evident from the hard usage which Mr. Walter Harris, correspondent for the Times, received at his hands last year.

CHORAL SOCIETIES TO SING AT THE PARK.

The Park Commissioners have struck a good idea in that suggestion to have choral societies sing at the Park. It is a most commendable project, and there is no doubt that it will meet with popular approval and deserved success. San Francisco has always been known for the artistic sensibilities of its cosmopolitan population. We have supported the only continuous opera house in the country for twenty years; we always turn out and give the glad hand and the bright dollar to visitors who bring us good things from abroad; our Sunday concerts in the Park are almost unique, and the people will certainly appreciate any endeavor to increase their opportunities to hear and enjoy good music. There are many singing societies in town, all of which, I think, will eagerly participate in the chorals at the Park. There is no reason why, in time, the interest in the chorals should not develop so much that we may have a competitive song-fest similar to those held in Germany. The Commissioners and Director Steindorff should receive every encouragement in the work they have undertaken.

PETTY THIEVERY.

More books have been stolen from the State University. Whenever a stock-taking is made at this institution, there is always found an unaccountable deficiency for which the students are responsible. The connection between crime and education is firmly established at Berkeley. This time the books taken are of a religious character, which would seem to imply that the fraud was pious, and that the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations might be involved. Further investigation, however, shows that the books possessed a pecuniary value by reason of their rarity, in addition to their spiritual worth. This would give rise to the belief that some one who is possessed of more intelligence than the members of the societies mentioned had got hold of a good thing.

BANISH THE PRIZE-FIGHTER.

California is about the only place left on the map of the United States where the plug-uglies of the prize-ring are permitted to carry on their bunko game without fear of the law. It is the Mecca of the sodden brutes who pummel—or pretend to pummel—each other for hire. Driven out elsewhere by enforcement of the vagrancy law, they come to California, they and their unspeakable womenkind, and prey upon the same foolish public which is making a syndicate of crooked race gamblers rich. These broken-nosed swaggerers, working through a coterie of fight-promoters who would be honored if one were to write of them as swindlers, manage to support themselves and their trainers of male and female camp-followers by occasional thumping matches held in the largest halls that we have. These affairs draw vast crowds and yield large sums of money. They pay nothing for advertising, and yet are announced and puffed and boomed by all the newspapers, as if they were events of world-wide consequence. The most mealy-mouthed of the newspapers disfigure their columns day after day with gross illustrations showing the disgusting nakedness of the huge, hairy animals that are to "battle" in the ring. The articles are coarse and foolish; the pictures are sheer obscenity. Whatever influence for good the newspapers put forth in their editorials and their articles dealing with the humanites and the decencies of life is offset and nullified by their alliance with the debasements of the prize-ring. How the newspapers justify their attitude toward this evil is a mystery. And not only do the newspapers sin by association with the bruisers, but so, full as heinously, do the officers of our Government, city and State, who not only permit prize-fights, under the name of "boxing contests," but abet them by their presence. Some city officials are actually in the business of arranging these nauseous swindles, devoting to this end time for which the city pays them to do its work.

It would be foolish to call upon the constituted authorities of the city to stop any of these prize-fights and equally foolish to demand of the newspapers that they tell the truth about the "fights" or the "fighters," but unless we are much mistaken it lies in the hands of any courageous and law-loving citizen to enforce the State law against prize-fights, or if no sufficient law exists, to secure the enactment of such a statute as would banish the plug-uglies. We hope that some such citizen will soon attack this evil. He may rely upon the support of a majority of the taxpayers, who regard the "fighters" and their adherents as little better than the crooks and thugs who fill our State prisons. He may count upon the support of the News Letter in any campaign for making the Jeffries and the Munros and all their kidney go to work or to jail.

HEARST AN INCITER OF RIOTS.

One would prefer to see in the frequent attacks on automobilists in and about New York only a sporadic hoodlumism, but the unpleasant truth is that these are manifestations of class-hatred—the class-hatred so carefully nurtured and stimulated by Hearst and all his yellow breed. Personally Hearst is—or was—a rich man; personally his sympathies are where the money is. It is only for political purposes that he cultivates the poor man and teaches him to hate and to harry the man whose name is on the assessment role. Part of this abominable campaign of incitement to mob fury includes the automobile, which Hearst's papers delight to call "the plaything of the rich," and to picture as a gigantic, swift car of Juggernaut, driven over the bodies of the hapless poor. In this false creed, one of the prime articles of faith is the belief that to be rich is to be criminal. And the criminal rich man, as Hearst and Hearst's dupes see him, finds his highest pleasure in tearing up and down streets in his "devil wagon," maiming and killing the proletariat.

The early consequences of this propaganda are at hand. Daily, men and women in automobiles are stoned and otherwise assaulted by rowdies in New York and its environs. Their valuable cars are damaged, and they themselves are injured, seriously as well as painfully. These attacks are not inspired by any desire for revenge, nor are they due to the fact that those attacked are infringing upon any right or privilege of those attacking. These assaults are made wholly and solely because the element in the community most easily misled into the breaking of laws has been taught to believe that any one who rides an automobile is rich, and therefore, in fact or in design, a murderer of the poor.

Hearst knows that the automobile is no more the "plaything of the rich" than is the more familiar "horse and buggy." He knows that it has come to stay and to do an increasing amount of the world's work. He knows that it is used for business and for pleasure by thousands of persons who are very far from being rich. He knows how deadly is the disease with which he is inoculating the people, arraying class against class and urging them on to warfare. The automobile, useful and bound to be still more useful, is simply a target and a pretext, a means of stirring up the strife out of which he hopes to snatch a little power and a little glory.

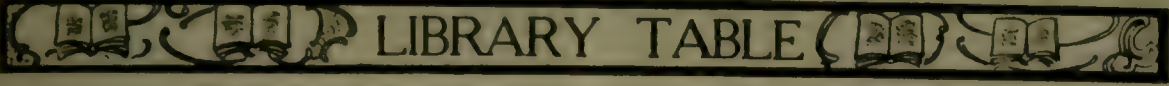

This same Hearst is supposed to be the publisher of Motor, a journal issued for automobile manufacturers. Advertisers of horseless vehicles will surely know where not to place their advertising after this experience.

The Trousseau Magazine Supplements of the yellow press are also responsible for the outrageous behavior of the people attending the wedding of Mr. Robert Golet and Miss Elsie Whelan. Such indecent conduct could not occur in San Francisco, for the people of this city are not swayed hither and yon by the prurient Hearst details. That a sweet and innocent young woman like Mrs. Golet, and a reserved and kindly young gentleman like her husband, should be subject to the affright of a mob of Hearst's followers, previously apprised and egged on by the details of the wedding—that-was-to-be by his loathsome newspapers (is a disgrace to the State of Pennsylvania and the nation in general.

LIBRARY TABLE

The Alaskan Boundary. The Alaska Packers' Association has published a book from a consideration of the Alaska Boundary question, prepared by the well-known geographer, George Davidson. Though the question of the boundary has now been settled, there are few people, who, having looked over this volume, will not endorse the statement of the publisher that it is "of inestimable worth as an historical and geographical treatise on that subject." It follows, therefore, that the decision to publish it is a wise one, and one can only echo the hope of the publishers that "the public will not fail to appreciate the labors of the venerable author, whose comprehensive and scientific learning and indomitable energy have been so faithfully employed."

The conclusions of Professor Davidson are that "Great Britain has no claim whatever to the border of the country surrounding the archipelago." He sums up: "I have not hesitated to assert that the United States has an impregnable right to the territory and the dominion thereof, and that this is a question which should never have been submitted to arbitration." The author shows by reference to his labors in connection with exploring parties and with official work on behalf of the United States Government how well equipped he is for the task which has been undertaken by him. He says: "We have been thus prolix to indicate that the consideration of the Alaska subject is not new to us, nor a mere sentiment. In forty-five years of continuous official duty upon this Coast, we have examined all the early Spanish, English, French, American and Russian authorities in order to learn the extent and locality of their discoveries, and give the origin of the names of capes, bays, rivers and straits."

The style of the book may be highly praised. It is well-bound, well-printed, and very convenient to handle. The full text of the treatise is set out, and there can be no fault found with the arrangement of the matter.

The Simple Home. Charles Keeler, author of "San Francisco and Thereabout," a book that has made quite a name for a very graceful writer, has written another, but less ambitious work. It is a compilation of original ideas regarding the building and the furnishing of a home in good taste, and without extraordinary expense. So much is being written on this subject that "The Simple Home" cannot be said to be "filling a long-felt want." The book is entertaining, however, and may furnish a valuable hint to many a home-builder and furnisher. The preface, as the keynote to the essays which follow, states that architecture, being the most utilitarian of the arts, is the basis of other expressions of the ideal, and that an improvement in home-making should underlie reform in all the arts. The chief value of the little book lies in its practical suggestions, in its discussions of materials, their treatment and use—clinker brick, shingles and plaster for exteriors; wood and plaster variously treated with construction showing, for interiors. The texture and decoration of fabrics are given attention, the making of furniture, the framing of pictures, the general use of ornamentation, etc. The chapter on gardens will be found helpful for the suburban home with flat or hilly environment, for the city home, the roof garden or the tenement house. The book is furnished with practical binding and one that is almost imperishable.

Paul Elder & Co., San Francisco. 75 cents.

In "The Alternate Sex," Charles Godfrey Leland gives students of sexualis much food for thought. He has a definite theme, and his thoughts are coherent. He dips his hand into his inexhaustible scrip of genius and scatters star-dust, but under the central attraction it arranges itself into something like cosmic order. However nebulous each separate idea may be, taken together they form a point of light not unlike a new-born star. The author claims that men and women are, in strict accordance with the opinion of the most recent physiologists, radically different as regards both body and mind, although social or domestic life has given them much in common.

Funk & Wagnalls, Publishers, New York. Price $1.00.

In "Evelyn Bird," the third and last of Mr. Eggleston's romances of the Civil War, the story is told of a high-minded and courageous Southerner, who joins the army of Lee at the time when the Confederacy is making its last desperate stand. He rescues a girl from a burning house, in the midst of an artillery engagement, at hazard of his life, and afterwards falls in love with her, but is withheld from declaring himself by a too scrupulous sense of duty. In the end, however, his enemy, dying, removes by his confession the stain from the soldier's honor, and incidentally throws some light on the history of his sweetheart—an absorbing story in itself, as afterwards set down in the "book" which she writes with her own hand. The heroic fortitude and devotion of the people of the South in the last stage of the war are strikingly shown.

Lothrop & Co., Publishers, Boston.

One of the literary creations of the year has arrived in the shape of a book written by Forrest Crissey, a well-known Western author, called "Tattlings of a Retired Politician." The literary form, which is a series of letters written by old Governor Bill Bradley, a retired politician, to his young friend back in the old district, is merely a vehicle for carrying an immense fund of political epigrams and wisdom and a succession of snappy and pointed political stories.

THE LOOKER-ON

Whatever may have been the causes leading to the suicide of Captain Wild last week, the effect has been to add another burden to the disgrace that many scandals have placed upon the army and its officers. There seems to be no end to the army scandals. The Madden affair afforded gossip over the tea-cups and in the club-rooms for months; the Pitcher business caused almost as much talk; now comes the suicide of Captain Wild, and the very latest morsel is that Major Taggart, of the Sixth Infantry, on duty in this city as Depot Quartermaster, has sued his wife for divorce on the ground of desertion and improper conduct. Incidentally, several gay Lieutenants have been placed under arrest for breaking leave, and at present two are confined to their quarters at Angel Island because, notwithstanding the paternal advice of their Colonel, they persisted in treading the path of dalliance. And at the bottom of each of these many and various affairs, as a matter of course, is a woman. The strange thing is that the army officers who manage to force themselves and their affairs into public notice should throw away their chances of advancement and risk their entire careers for some women who, from all accounts, are really not worth the while.

Now, there was Captain Wild, for instance. Some of his friends say he killed himself because his love was unrequited. That does seem a rather puerile excuse in these days of divorce courts and materialism. The lady for whom he sighed had other strings to her bow, for, it is said, she had had an affair with Colonel Parker Whitney West. Incidentally, as a sort of side issue, she was also on friendly terms with an enterprising adventurer known to the police as the King of the Bunco Men. His picture may be found in the Rogue's Gallery. With so much opposition, the story goes, Captain Wild made but little progress. So he killed himself. If his friends' theory be correct, and if he was led to take his life because the lady's smiles were not for him alone, then one can simply say that the methods of some men are past ordinary understanding. Here was a man in his forties; a man who knew life as only such knowledge can come to a soldier who has faced death in battle; a man who had wandered up and down the earth for a quarter century; one who was popular with his fellows, and who apparently enjoyed every moment of existence—snuffing out his life because of a bunco man. It seems hardly real.

These many scandals should convince the authorities at Washington that social conditions in the army need reformation. The officers should be given more to do in the line of serious work. No real man wants to be bothered with the petty details of canteen and commissariat drudgery, but many would receive with pleasure orders that would require them to give more of their attention to the important work of their profession. At present, a large percentage of the officers seem to think their positions entitle them to the full enjoyment of a somewhat lazy existence, with all the attendant circumstances and temptations. Harder work and stricter surveillance by superiors should effect some reformation.

The publishers of that much-discussed peerage book of America are certainly daring men. They propose giving an awaiting world the full genealogical history of all the men and women in America who are entitled to armorial bearings. Neither wealth nor pulchritude is to have weight in considering the claims of the elect. The name must be blown in the bottle; the blood must be of the deepest cerulean before the applicant for fame may have his name enrolled among the country's truly great. Only the really old families will be recognized. No one who did not know his grandfather will be given a chance. That condition may bar many of our local leaders of society, but there is satisfaction in the knowledge that there are among us some who came from "away back." There is Bishop Nichols, for instance; Senator Bard, former Governor Markham, the Kips, Tom Fitch, E. F. Preston, the Barnes, the Bidwells and the Cutters; William J. Dutton and John Ferrie, Captain Overton, C. P. Fenner, Charles Archard, E. T. Ward, and H. O. Collins, of Los Angeles; Ronald Thomas and Edwin T. Ward of Santa Barbara, and others. It will be a very interesting book. One item of interest, for instance, is that J. Pierpont Morgan traces his title deeds back to a king of Wales, who had a corner on Cornwall about 900 years ago. Incidentally, J. Morgan Smith, nephew of the current banker and descendant of the Welshman of "ye ancient days," is being chased around New York by a big policeman who traces his blood back to Conn of the Hundred Battles, who was a power in his days, and who was the man that first split up Ireland. Which goes to show that despite the passing of time and the publication of books, the representatives of the Celtic tribes have carried their animosities down through the ages.

J. Morgan Smith, by the way, is better known in the local red-light district than upon Wall street. He is hail-fellow-well-met with every barkeeper and chorus girl from O'Farrell street to the Orchard. Fate may have tried to conceal him by calling him Smith, but at an early age he determined to live up to his "J. Morgan," and that he has done so, local history proves. Smith "blew in" here about six years ago; he did the line for a time, and then he shipped in a whaler. After a voyage to the North, he returned in better physical condition, but he had had enough of deep sea craft, and he restricted his efforts thereafter to schooners. He piloted many of them over the bar. The young man must have had a hidden source of income, for he did no more hard work than was necessary to explain why his uncle did not corner the earth, yet he was always there when there was "anything doing." He was close in with the race track crowd, and knew more about the crookedness of their crooked game than was good for a youth whose most famous relative is a pillar of the church. Mr. Smith conferred his name and the pleasure of his constant society upon the sister of Nan Randolph, the notorious chorus girl now under indictment for the murder of Caesar Young in New York. If Smith knows anything about that murder, the New York police can get his heart's secrets by submitting him to the "third degree." J. Morgan had enough trouble aboard that whaler. He is a philosopher, and the main rule of his life is "look out for Smithy." No deep, dark dungeon for J. Morgan.

In answer to his wife's request for a greater allowance, pending the decision of the suit for divorce, Captain Madden says his regular income is $180 a month as a Captain, and he gets $20 more while acting as Adjutant. He allows his wife $100 a month, and he says he needs the other hundred in his business. The mystery that the ordinary man cannot solve is—how do army officers manage to make such a showing on their salaries? Madden, with $200 per, does better than dozens and dozens of young men at the Presidio, married and single, and yet every man of them goes around town popping corks, buying autos by the hour, keeping up their end in the clubs, and otherwise showing contempt for coin. Very few have anything but their salaries, and the question is—how do they do it?

Judge Kerrigan has an old head on his young shoulders. One Henry W. Von Kapff, an inspector of the United Railroads, went before the Judge, asking for a divorce from his wife on the ground of cruelty. He showed that during the recent threatened car strike he told his wife that, if the men struck, he might be ordered to take out a car. The partner of his bosom, who is evidently a strike promoter, fervently expressed the hope that if he took out a car he would be shot.

"Divorce granted," said the court.

If Mrs. Von Kapff and some more women with little sense and long tongues, were "cripple-creeked" there would be less dissension in families and honest men would not be intimidated at their very fire-sides, when endeavoring to act honestly by their employees.

Mrs. Kate Hodges, who conducts a resort for the weary at Baden, felt real sorry for Allen E. de Montispan when that enterprising globe-trotter was laid by the heels and put away safely in the city prison. She sent him dainties, for the prison's coarse fare would not assimilate with his blue blood. De Montispan had casually informed Mrs. Hodges that he is a French Count. She knows now that he is also several other things, for when the law released its hold on him, he hied away to Mrs. Hodges's resort for the weary, enjoyed free board for several days, and then disappeared. The trusting landlady's jewels disappeared at the same time. Now, Mrs. Hodges wants revenge; also the jewels; likewise de Montispan. French Counts are quoted below par just now at Baden.

The captain of the Algoa, who ran his ship on the rocks at Point Bonita last week, may lose his license for his foolhardiness. If a word in mitigation may aid his case, let me pen it here. When he stove in his forepeak, and swamped about $1,000 worth of fire-works, the captain conferred a blessing on the long-suffering public. Of course, he did not mean to do so; he honestly meant to land that bunch of fire-crackers and things at the dock, but let him be Again the white-winged dove of peace has had its wings clipped at the French Hospital. This time it was not a capital operation, and with careful nursing the dove may get back into form again. But if it is nursed by the nurses whose methods of nursing caused its present lameness, the aforesaid dove may turn into a gamey sea-gull and never more be the messenger of a harmonious household. Those nurses at the French hospital are a lot of gay, young, innocent things, and that's where all the trouble comes in. The head nurse proved that one of her subordinates, during the long and weary watches of the night, had introduced a bun into her system. Horrors! The idea of nurses masticating buns on duty! "It might be worse. Let's investigate," said the keen-eyed chief. The investigation produced many results in the shape of "dead soldiers," laid away to rest behind bureau drawers and other hiding places. Now, it is not charged that any particular nurse "had a bun," though it is said one nurse did have a bun. You can figure that out for yourself. It is like the weight of Charley Hill's brick and a half. If one bun and a dozen "dead soldiers" cause a revolution in the French Hospital, what will be necessary to create an agitation at the annual election of the officers of that frequently disturbed institution?

The Tonopah Mining Boom.

A heavy demand for MacNamara woke up the bears on the Tonopah exchange during the week. The ball continues to roll right merrily along, and the end is not yet. The great difficulty in handling a deal in these stocks is the immense number of shares in the different corporations. They run into the millions, and although boxed up, act as a menace at all times to a bull market. It is to be hoped that the report is not true that the men just driven out from Colorado are about to enter the Tonopah district. That camp has been quiet and orderly so far, but a number of labor agitators could set it back in a few weeks to a point from which it would not recover in years.

The Bogy Mining Combine.

It is amusing to note the serious attention given to the report that Eastern capitalists are going to form a mining trust, with the intention of gobbling all the mines in the country, including those of the State of California. It is difficult to realize that any one in his senses would give credence to such a wild tissue of impossibilities. There are very few mines in California which are worth absorption by a combine. There are mines enough, but they require development up to a point where they will be useful as an adjunct to a large incorporated combine, who are after heavy producing concerns, but not prospects. There is little danger just now of any concern of that character running away with our mines.

Comstock Shares at a Discount.

When we say that the stock market on Pine street has gone to pieces it does not amount to much, as things go nowadays. It would not take a very big basket to hold the pieces after they were picked up. Prices have been phenomenally low for months past, considering the very favorable outlook on the Comstock itself, and the fact that a body of ore is now being opened up at the North-end. Matters would not be so bad were it not for the manipulations of a band of marauders who systematically short the market, and until it gets broken up, if the power can be created capable of bursting the ring, nothing need be expected in the way of a bull movement worthy the name. To-day the pressure is only lifted from the market to get it in shape again for another squeeze. Milking the street is about the most profitable end of the game just now from the fact that the people engaged in this are about the last one would suspect of undermining a business which can be turned to such profit in other directions. The mining proposition on the lode is good, and it would carry the market all right if permitted to do so. Dividends have already been an unlucky thing for the market. The minute one is declared on a stock, that seals its doom, insofar as its speculative feature is concerned. Every old-time dealer in Comstock shares will admit the fact and be able to corroborate it. It is another strange phase of the local speculative business. Dealers would rather gamble on an uncertainty at any time than invest in a certainty, receiving a regular return upon their money.

There are now 345 banks in California under the supervision of the Bank Commissioners. This is 33 more than reported on January 23d. The total includes 32 incorporated commercial banks in San Francisco and 205 outside of the city, 11 savings banks in San Francisco and 77 outside, and 20 private banks, all in the interior. Most of the new banks are small affairs, as the increase in resources since January 23d is only $7,050,319.96, and in the deposits $634,179.98. There are now 77 savings banks in the State, outside of those in operation in San Francisco. This is an increase of 18 from the previous report on January 28th. Most of these were incorporated a year ago, but only commenced business in the last three months. The resources of these 77 banks show an increase of $3,131,278.61 from January 23d, and the deposits an increase of $972,471.50.

Dividends Paid and Payable.

The following banks have just declared dividends. The Security Savings Bank, semi-annual on all deposits for six months ending June 30th, at the rate of 3.25 per cent; London and San Francisco Bank, Limited, a dividend of four per cent per annum for the six months ending March 31st; the Union Trust Company, 3 per cent on ordinary and 3.3 per cent per annum on term deposits, payable on July 1st. Dividends paid during the week were as follows: Four Oil, 1c per share, or $3,000; Gas Consumers' Association, 10c per share, or $5,000; Presidio Railway, 20c. per share, or $2,000; Port Costa Water, 30c. per share, or $1,500; Truckee General Electric, 10c. per share, or $5,000.

According to the official report of the California Stock and Oil Exchange, 13 oil companies on its list paid $93,500 in dividends in May. The Union and United Petroleum did not pay in May, but in April, the former at the rate of 70c. per, and the latter at the rate of $1.15 per share. The companies pay only quarterly. The Union has an acreage of 173,500 acres in various districts in the State, and an issue of 54,043 shares, so that its dividend is $38,250, and not $70,000, as commonly reported. The United Petroleum owns a controlling interest in Union, and has a share issue of 14,080, so that its dividend is $16,882. The Sovereign, which paid its first dividend in May, has a share issue of 400,000, and its dividend of 1 1/2 per share is therefore $6,000, and not $75,000 as reported. The total oil dividends from the companies listed at the exchange to May 1st is $5,043,250.

The California Gas and Electric Corporation has just paid its second dividend of 25 cents per share, or $37,500. Things have run a little more smoothly during the past week, with this corporation, under the more tactful administration of the new men who joined the board recently. It is expected that before long Mr. Miller will take charge as president during the absence of the present incumbent, who is about to leave upon his travels again. A vigorous overhauling of the mechanical end of the corporation is next in order, and that it may come soon is the prayer of the unfortunate shareholders who now live in hope of better times ahead in the near future.

THE AMUSEMENTS OF A CANDIDATE.

The Candidate sat in his Morris chair and slid down to the "get that habit position," bringing all his weight to bear on his *collar button, and reaching for a scratch pad, he began to figure. Suddenly he grew pale, and touching the electric button, he directed the menial to send him the expert in heraldry.

A pale old man with fugitive whiskers appeared on the scene in a few minutes and bowed low before the "Yellow Pest."

"Didn't you figure it out that my genealogy carried me back to John Randolph?"

"Yes, sir, I did."

"Have you looked up the genealogy of this woman who shot Caesar Young?"

"I have, O Mighty Intellect!"

"Is she not also a direct lineal descendant of the same great man?"

"She is, Noble Intelligence!"

"Go from my sight! Begone!"

And then William Randolph the Oneth slid back into his favorite attitude of sitting on his collar button and mused: "There must have been something extraordinarily vile in that great man's blood. Here's Nan and I steeped in the same peculiar sins. She is a bad one from the start, but she has always put up a remarkable front, just like myself. * * * Poor girl, blood will tell. I must make a note of it, and have Brisbane write a touching editorial entitled: 'No Crest or Coronet! Give us the Horny Hand of Labor!'"

* * * * *

*It is said that Willie prefers to sit on his collar button because that brings the two centers of origin of thought in his make-up closest together.

What between the recent sensational ex-Mayor Snow-Goldman affair and the "supposed" rupture between the Olney and Dingee factions of the Pacific Union Club, we wonder if our trans-bay neighbors, the Oaklandites, will ever awaken to the true state of affairs in social and political life.

TOWN CRIER

(Dr. A. E. Salazar of Santiago, Chile, says: "Your universities are marvels.")

A Chilean professor

Says our colleges are great—

Did he interview the manners of the scholars?

Does he think the classes perfect?

Does he think co-eds sedate?

Or is he only talking for the dollars?

There is something here awry.

Did he wink the other eye?

Should we laugh, or feel it hot beneath our collars?

Did the Chilean professor

Really mean to praise the schools?

He simply said he thought them quite a marvel—

Did he mean in wit and wisdom,

Or the students, wondrous fools,—

A sort of sublimated Richard Carvel?

Or did the bland Chileno

Intend to be so mean-o,

As insinuate our scholarship is larval?

The San Francisco Labor Council has taken upon itself to denounce the state of things in Colorado. As a matter of fact, they need denunciation, but not of the sort which the Labor Council chooses to fling. The Labor Council is for the most part led by a gang of smooth rogues, most of whom have greatly improved their chances in life by the part which they have taken in labor agitation. It is only a very few years since President Benham had a very small printing shop on Turk street, and one, moreover, that was not regarded with any particular admiration by the union. Now he is President of the Labor Council, has a good-sized printing establishment, and is growing rich withal. There are three ways of making money: by working, by begging, or stealing, and the union leader is seldom either a worker or a beggar.

There can be no question of the validity of the decision of Judge Allen of Los Angeles that insanity is not ground for divorce; there can also be no question of its entire unreasonableness. The judge says: "There is no condition of life under which the unfortunate partner should receive greater attention or more loving care and kindness than under the burden of a disordered mind." It is equally true that no one except a trained expert in insanity can give that care and attention, and, as a matter of fact, the insane person has usually to be removed from the domicile of that partner. Law should deal with the living; it should not concern itself with the dead, and the lunatic is practically dead already. For the fundamental purposes of matrimony, he is worse than dead—he is dangerous. His practical death should impose no disability on the survivor.

A few weeks ago a scathing denunciation was made in this paper of the physicians who neglect to attend to cases where the payment of a sufficiently large fee is doubtful. That there are many of this kind is evident from even a cursory glance at the columns of the daily paper. Thus, a child died the other day, entirely for want of medical attendance, the mother saying: "We were too poor to have a doctor." This is a pretty commentary on the condition of things in a civilized community. A mother has a sick child and is afraid to ask a doctor to attend to it because she has not the money to pay a fee, and she knew, by bitter experience, that this fee would be demanded before the disciple of Galen would render the services necessary to relieve the sufferer.

The Oakland teachers declare that two thousand five hundred dollars is the smallest sum upon which a man can live respectably and bring up a family. Needless to say, I should like to see that standard reached and maintained, for the welfare of the State depends to a great extent upon the material prosperity of its citizens. But the Oakland teachers are indulging in vain dreams if they think that they will ever be able to obtain a salary of that size from the public funds. It is far beyond that of any of the other professions. Of course, there are lawyers and doctors and some few clergymen who make much more, but they do so either by the possession of certain unusual gifts of intellect which are not called for, and in fact could not be employed in the teaching profession or by extraordinary business ability, which has no place in teaching. It is by no means proved that the amount of intelligence and skill which goes to the making of a first-class artisan is any less than that of a trained teacher.

The jury as well as the judge seem to be fatal obstacles to the proper carrying out of the law. Only a few days ago a Chinaman was convicted of killing a fellow Mongolian by shooting him in the back, just about as despicable a way of getting rid of an enemy as could well be conceived. Our intelligent and highly sympathetic jury found him guilty of murder in the second degree, and not content with this example of fatuous and criminal disregard of their oath, coupled with the verdict a recommendation to mercy. It may be said for the judge, however, that he refused to consider the recommendation and imposed the maximum penalty. What can be done in a case like this? Between the carelessness of judges and the folly of juries it will yet come about that life and property will be of no more value than among the dacoits. The administration of the law is fast converting itself into an absurdity.

Hurrah! At last we have accomplished something which will sound in the world. One of our local professors has issued a bulletin entitled "Artificial Partheno—Genesis and Regular Segmentation in an Annelid," in which is demonstrated that in the annelid, which is a marine worm of the genus Ophelia, of the parthenogenetic larvae produced by artificial treatment of the element in which the animal lives originates from regular segmentary eggs. How do you like that? If anybody can have any doubt henceforward of the value of modern education, just brandish that in his face. It should be obvious to the meanest capacity that the words are splendid, but why in the name of all that is euphonious is there not a union to prevent the overworking of the President's English?

One week has wrought a wonderful change in the prospects of Mountenay Jephson, the former lieutenant of the late H. M. Stanley. His old chief, with whom the lieutenant had serious differences, has passed away, and the bride for whom Mr. Jephson waited over twelve years has at last become his. Jephson possesses the virtue of steadfastness, as no one knew better than the great explorer himself, for his lieutenant had the courage when Stanley's popularity was at its height, to denounce his conduct unsparingly, and to point out his cynical egotism without reserve. He met opposition in San Francisco in the same spirit, and was practically victorious in both cases. It is good to see bravery and steadfastness win occasionally.

THE CASE OF DR. DOGGE AND HIS ACCIDENT INSURANCE.

"The remarkable case of Dr. Dogge" is the way the daily press has captioned an article regarding the suit of the San Jose doctor against the Fidelity and Casualty Company of New York. Dr. Dogge was injured on July 18, 1902, at Menlo Park, and he brings suit to recover $14,712 as indemnity for the accident. His policy called for $100 a week, and Dogge claims that he was incapacitated for 74 4-7 weeks. During the illness of Dogge a sensation was caused by the action of Mrs. Dogge in publicly horsewhipping Dr. Lincoln Cothran, a member of the State Board of Examiners, whom she claimed was trying to prove that her husband was hoaxing.

It is strongly suspected in many quarters that this is only another instance of an accident insurance company essaying to avoid its just responsibility. There are many cases on record that would go to prove that accident insurance companies go to greater lengths to quibble and compromise than any other style of assurance corporation. It is whispered that the company in question will invariably attempt a compromise with the unfortunate who has suffered from a broken leg or arm or a contusion of any kind. It will immediately send the examining physician to the bedside of the policy holder, and he will compute the minimum and maximum duration of incapacity, and from this computation a compromise offer will be made, it is said, and not on the basis of the plain reading of the policy. You are not insured against your loss of time with these companies at twenty or twenty-five dollars a week, but for whatever in your extremity and necessity you are willing to take on the guess of an expert. As a general rule these sharks make by the compromise. It is taken for granted that they will never offer to pay more than the original agreement. The only protection the policy-holder has is the employment of an absolutely reliable physician of his own, and to categorically and energetically refuse to compromise.

Lichau has returned to her home at 455 Geary street, after a five weeks' sojourn in Chicago, Washington, New York and the Fair at St. Louis. This corset has the distinction of being the first and only one that earned the full approval of the medical profession. SOCIETY

Dear Bessie: How time does gallop! Just think of the Fourth of July being so close at hand that parties for its proper celebration out of town are already arranged. Of course, Del Monte is to be a favored spot, and I hear that already rooms are at a premium for the holiday, while house parties will fairly swarm all over the State. I have just been taking a stroll along some of the residence streets in the Western Addition, and it is enough to make one feel dismal to see all the closed up doors, and windows with drawn blinds, betokening the out-of-town state of their owners. The city is not yet, however, nor is it to be, the howling wilderness it has been in other years, for quite a number have elected to stay in town, and only make brief visits here and there for a few days at a time. For instance, the Chris Reises, who usually go to Menlo for the entire season; Bernie Drown Boardman, the Russ Wilsons, the Girvins—and oh, lots of others will be here to put one's finger on, if one wishes.

Between Mrs. Leslie Carter and E. D. Sothern there has been an actual surfeit of theatre parties this week. Mrs. Arthur Holland gave a bridge party the other night for Mrs. Felton from Santa Barbara; there was a lovely hop at the Presidio last night, and I have had a lot of invitations of late to that lively little suburb of ours—Oakland. Bessie Scupham had a very pleasant card party last Saturday for Mrs. Herbert Gaskell; Marie Butters gave a delightful tally-ho ride, with luncheon, at the Piedmont clubhouse, but I think the pleasantest of all was Ethel Moore's luncheon party for Mrs. George Martin, nee Bates, who is here on a visit, which was an al fresco affair and enjoyed to the utmost.

There is to be quite a batch of weddings next month—the O'Sullivan-Sutro, Anna Sperry's and Florence Bailey's among them. Florence will have Grace Spreckels for her maid of honor, and Mabel Watkins, Lily Spreckels, Bessie and Bernie Wilson as the other attendant maids. Edith Findley and George Gardiner are to be married August 20th.

Jean Nokes Murphy's friends are all preparing to give her the jolliest kind of a time during her coming visit to San Francisco. She and Mrs. Nokes, who has been at Fort Russell with her daughter the past six months, will arrive here early in July, and remain till the middle of August, during which time Jean is to officiate as matron of honor to Anna Sperry when her wedding comes off, returning the compliment to Anna, who was her chief attendant. I have just received cards for the wedding of Mary Maus, whom I think you met while her father was chief surgeon of this department; she is to marry Captain Edgar H. Fry, of the 13th Infantry, and the ceremony will be performed in the post chapel at Fort Riley on the 29th. Apropos of army weddings, there will soon be another bride at the Presidio when Captain Rumford of the 28th, who was married last week in New York, returns with his wife, and the idea now seems to prevail that the regiment is likely to make a prolonged stay there.

So Anna Head's long waiting has been rewarded at last, as we have just heard of her marriage to Lieutenant Jephson last week at Ascot, in England, and was quite a swell affair. She is a charming woman, and richly deserves all the happiness that is now likely to be hers. I don't think I have ever known a year when Yosemite has been in such favor as this one. Lots of people have gone and are going, and lots more are not content with the usual week's visit, but are spending a month or more in the valley. The W. J. Duttons and Maylita Pease are there now; Miss J. B. Schroeder and Eugenic Hawes, who left last week, will remain there the rest of the month. The Jack Wilsons, who were there for a month, have just returned to town.

The "Boston" is in port again, and I believe it will not be so very long till we are called upon to give welcome to Admiral Glass and his fleet on his return from the cruise south and to the Hawaiian Islands; so you see there will soon be lots of fun going both afloat and ashore. The Jules Bretts, who are becoming the most inveterate globe-trotters, dropped in upon us the other day, but only for a brief rest, as they are off again to see the Mikado this time, and may be away for quite a while, as Addie says. We are to bid adieu to the Peter Martins to-day for an indefinite period, I understand, and they have had no end of farewell attentions showered upon them before leaving, down at Burlingame, over at San Rafael, in Mill Valley, and in San Francisco—the Baroness Von Schroeder, Herman Oelrichs, the Downey Harveys, the Walter Martins and the clan Howard in its numerous branches at San Mateo being among their entertainers of late. Aunt Susie is quite pleased at the prospect of so soon seeing "Nellie Howard," as she calls her, as they were great friends before Chandler captured Nellie and carried her off to the Flowery Kingdom. Mrs. Howard, who has made several visits to San Francisco during the past few years, will be here again this month, but only makes a brief stay, as she and Gladys, who is at the university in Berkeley, are going to Europe for the summer. Louise Harrington Leahy is still at Vallejo, but as soon as the Tacoma sails with her hubby on board, is coming down to the city to remain with her mother while he is away—anyhow for several months. Helen Davis is home from her visit to the Atlantic Coast, coming back to act as maid of honor at Eleanor Warner's wedding next month; Hazel King has gone to Boston for a visit, and sails for Europe the end of the month to join her sister; Belle Harmes does not expect to go East till the early winter. Margaret Wilson is going to Fort Meade, South Dakota, to spend the month of August; Bessie Gowan left by the Siberia for Peking, where her wedding to Thomas Haskins is to take place in July; Agnes Burgin has gone East for a two months' visit to Gotham.

The J. L. Floods are at their Menlo Park mansion for the summer, where Miss Jennie spends a good deal of her time; the Frank Carolans have been at Santa Barbara for some time; Edith Kierstadt is here visiting Mrs. McBean; Mrs. George Gibbs has gone for a passear to Chico. All the Gerstles are at their San Rafael homes for the summer; the Moodys and McMonagles are in Santa Cruz this year; the Herbert Moffatts are to take in Lake Tahoe next month. Captain Fred Johnson leaves for the East in August, and a little bird whispers there will be some interesting news heard about that time, but the twitterings of those feathered creatures are not always to be relied upon.

It is pleasant news to hear we are to have the Huntingtons back before the winter season begins, instead of their remaining abroad for a year or more, as at one time contemplated. They will be here again about October. We should sadly miss their lovely parties were they absent. Marie Voorhies and Meda Houghton both got back from their visit to Japan and the Philippines last Monday; they came on the army transport Logan. —Elsie.

The Society of Human Endeavor, of which Dr. O. N. Orlow is founder and president, tendered him a reception Wednesday evening at the Hall of the United Crafts and Arts. The occasion was to celebrate the second anniversary of Dr. Orlow's arrival in San Francisco. Over one hundred members were in attendance and many letters and telegrams were received from absent friends. After a delightful musical programme, supper was served in the Japanese room, which was draped in pink. The rooms were filled with beautiful flowers, the gift of appreciative friends.

Mr. George T. Marsh and wife left for the World's Fair, St. Louis, on Wednesday last, to be gone about a month. Mr. Marsh is installing a magnificent exhibition of Japanese wares in the San Francisco Building, and desires to personally see that it is perfect in every detail.

FISH FOR TWO.

Two young San Franciscans, P. N. Lilienthal, Jr., and young Fritz Kahn, have been having an ideal outing in the Yosemite. During their stay they essayed to carry off the palm in piscatorial pursuits, but Lilienthal's hunger invariably interfered just as he was about to land the largest rainbow trout ever caught. Fritz Kahn would certainly have caught the fish Philip just missed hooking had it not been that his habit of falling asleep always overtook him at the inopportune moment. What with their love of tramping, and the two ailments mentioned, they managed to keep hotel keepers and mountaineers busy looking after their welfare. They took a long trip down the Yosemite Valley and left famine in their wake. The boys made many friends in Grizzly land, and there is a universal wish expressed that they come again.

It will undoubtedly be a great pleasure to her patrons and others to learn that she has decided to offer the "New Model Corset" and Imported Waist Patterns during June and July at greatly reduced prices. This should be an inducement to those who desire to follow the fads of fashion and the correct idea to call at the new establishment at 1211 Sutter street, near Polk.

INSURANCE

The passing of the Manchester Fire Insurance Company was accomplished at a meeting of that company's stockholders held in Liverpool on Friday, the 3d instant. Reports indicate that there was considerable opposition, but that the directors held a working majority, and governed the deal through. The revised terms of the amalgamation which was carried at the meeting referred to are, according to a circular issued by manager Mallet, as follows:

1. That it is desirable to amalgamate the undertaking of this company with that of the Atlas Assurance Company, Limited, and that the provisional agreement made with a view thereto (which agreement is dated the thirteenth day of May, 1904, and made between the Manchester Assurance Company of the one part, and the Atlas Assurance Company, Limited, of the other part) be and the same is hereby approved and adopted.

2. That this company be wound up voluntarily, and that George Reynolds Davies, of Manchester, and John Henry Dixon, of Manchester, be and they are hereby appointed liquidators without remuneration.

3. That pursuant to Section 161 of the Companies' Acts, 1862, they be and are hereby authorized and directed to carry the said agreement into effect with such, if any, modification as they may think expedient.

Should the above resolution be passed by the requisite majority, they will be submitted for confirmation as special resolutions by a subsequent general meeting which will be convened for the purpose.

The general terms of the provisional agreement above referred to are as follows:

The Manchester will forthwith transfer to the Atlas the whole of its undertaking, property and assets, with the sole right to use the name of the Manchester in connection with insurance business. All debts and liabilities of the Manchester will be satisfied and discharged by the Atlas, who will discharge all expenses incident to the winding-up of the Manchester. The Atlas will increase its capital by the creation of 100,000 new shares of £10 each with £1 4s. credited as paid-up, for distribution amongst the holders of the Manchester in proportion to the shares held by them respectively, subject to the statutory rights of dissentient shareholders. The existing £50 shares of the Atlas will be divided into £10 shares with ¼ 4s. credited as paid-up.

It is safe to say the general meeting will concur and join the funeral ceremonies of the Manchester.

The information obtainable fails to disclose anything of importance as to the future action in the United States of the Atlas in disposing of the Manchester.

The Pacific Mutual Life has opened at Denver a branch office for the operation of its intermediate department.

The cable brings the news from Honolulu of the death of S. A. D. Jones. It is said that his body will be brought to San Francisco for burial. Mr. Jones was well known in California at one time as a leading life insurance man, and has been connected with nearly all the companies at one time or another.

Colonel Jasper E. Brady, the man who failed to insure President Roosevelt's life when he was in San Francisco, has left the Conservative Life, and is now with a Chicago life company.

Blair T. Scott, of Portland, Oregon, who has made a success as manager of the Washington Life on the North Pacific Coast, has been appointed superintendent of agencies at the home office in New York.

Oklahoma and Indian Territory have been added to the Northwestern department of the Commercial Union and Palatine, managed by J. Frank Edmonds at Denver.

The Phoenix Mutual Life, a company which has up to now been liberal in writing insurance on the lives of saloon men, has decided that it will not in future write this class at all. It would be interesting to obtain the company's experience on this class of risks. Had it been profitable, however, there would have been no reason for a discontinuance.

The late Judge Cary, Western manager of the German-American, at Chicago, left an estate of about half a million dollars.

The field men, managers and officials of the Insurance Company of North America conventionized at Erie on the 8th instant to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of general agent J. F. Downing's service in that capacity.

An English exchange throws a side light on life insurance as "she is done in England." It says: "Attention was called in our news columns on Wednesday to a policy issued by the Norwich Union, under which a matter of £2,500 became payable by reason of the birth of a son to the late Marquis of Donegal in his eighty-first year. At the time the policy was issued the marquis was seventy, and was, moreover, living apart from his wife, and under the circumstances the chances of his having further issue seemed extremely remote. But the marchioness died and the widower married again. Where cover is required against an out-of-the-way risk, the transaction becomes a special or private one, based on the facts of the particular case, rather than on generalities which cover the needs of a class. In the case of a very old man, the husband of an aged woman, the risk which an office takes when it insures against further issue to the man is trifling, because the death of the present wife and a further marriage are conditions precedent to a further birth. But where it is desired to insure against the contingency of a comparatively young man having further issue, the matter is on an altogether different basis. Thus we were a week or two ago asked to name an office which would insure against a widower of middle age marrying again and having further issue. The man was already a widower, and therefore free to marry as soon as he liked, and his age was not likely to prove an obstacle. In such a case—assuming that there were no special hindrances to the re-marriage—the risk would be so heavy that we doubt whether terms satisfactory to both sides could be come to, if, indeed, an office possessed of wisdom would entertain the proposal at all." It would be difficult to find an American company to issue such a "cover."

Last Saturday and Sunday's fire record in San Francisco shows that among other alarms there were eight runs caused by sparks from chimneys or smoke stacks. These fires were, and like ones are, preventable, and carelessness of this kind on behalf of owners or tenants should be punished.

Of recent humanitarian inventions none is more remarkable than the baby incubator now being exhibited in its most improved form on the Pike at the St. Louis World's Fair. To save a human life and to bring it to usefulness is the work of the baby incubator. Premature infants placed in this machine are kept from all contact with varying conditions of the atmosphere and temperature, which would ordinarily give them short shrift. They are fed on the most improved food, which is modified to suit each individual, and are left in the incubator until their powers of resistance are sufficiently developed to withstand the shocks that even the most carefully raised baby must necessarily stand.

The California Promotion Committee requests California merchants to order 10,000 envelopes advertising the State. These envelopes will be sold by the committee complete at $1 a thousand, and will be brought direct from the factory in carload lots. They are a first-class quality of bond paper, with statistics of California products on the back. The merchant's business card is printed on the front of the envelope. In this way two and a half millions of these envelopes will be circulated all over the United States. As only those who go in for the carloads can take advantage of this remarkable offer, the Promotion Committee requests that business men will immediately send in their orders.

"Pin-Head" McCarthy of the San Francisco Building Trades Council, has been sent for to "whip the contractors of Los Angeles into line." It is said his tactics will be to use the Carpenters' Union to open the fight, and finally involve all lines of building employment. The time has come when labor must purify itself by going into the casting out of devil's business.

PLEASURE'S WAND

A TRUSTY TIP ON THINGS THEATRICAL.

GRAND—Mrs. Leslie Carter, "Du Barry," see below.
COLUMBIA—Sothern, "Proud Prince," a magnificent production.
ORPHEUM—A splendid vaudeville performance.
ALCAZAR—Stock—"Charley's Aunt," laughter and fun.
CENTRAL—Stock—"The Octoroon," an enjoyable performance.
FISCHER'S—Stock—"U. S." A great success. Fun and brilliancy.
CHUTES—A fine show every afternoon and evening.

Du Barry, Leslie Carter, Belasco, this spells the triumph of theatrical genius. Wonderful as was the Mansfieldian performance in this city, it remained for Mrs. Carter to eclipse every previous effort in the production of historical plays. Mrs. Carter has not youth or beauty to recommend her to the public, but she has transcendent art, and "Du Barry" is a vehicle with which to transmit her gift incomparable to the public, given to but few actresses. "Du Barry" is Belasco's life triumph. It is a wonderful tribute to the man's ingenuity and ability. It is a stupendous, magnificent and soul-stirring story that is un-wound before you, and if at times the author has departed from the straight and narrow path of truthful tradition, it has always been to the betterment of history.

I cannot find words to sufficiently thank Mrs. Carter for the pleasure of hearing her, and you know, my masters, that I am not easily pleased. In the scene of the "Petit Lever," when she has her struggle with poor Cosse, she reaches an impassioned height seldom equaled by any living actress, and again when, as the broken, disheartened and cornered courtesan, she pleads for a few minutes of life to bid God-speed to her lover and her faithful servant, she displays to the full the craven and inconstant spirit that so marked the risen daughter of the people when placed in comparison with the patrician. The aristocrat went to his death unflinchingly, while the ennobled plebeian, uncomfortable by ancestry, craved a boon at the hands of the butchers.

Around and about this wonderful piece of kaleidoscopic activity, taken bodily out of the tumultuous Terror, we find a suitable frame. Every actor and actress in Mrs. Carter's company is letter perfect; every piece of scenery is an historical reproduction. I came away filled with wonder and thrilled with the consciousness of having seen one of the greatest actresses the world has ever known in one of the greatest plays that was ever written.

The Alcazar opens its doors to fun, fast and furious all this week. The capable stock is engaged on "Charley's Aunt," and the play is carried out with energy and ability. Mr. Maher carries the part of the bogus aunt to perfection. Mr. Durkin and Mr. Hilliard are both good in their parts, and the feminine part of the cast is excellently portrayed. Miss Starr interjects the only bit of sentimentality there is in the lines, and she does it very well indeed. She is a fine ingenue. It is to laugh, and to laugh uproariously, at the Alcazar this week, and if you are thin and desire to grow fat, go and hear "Charley's Aunt," and if you are fat and have the blues devouring your soul, go and see Maher and his make-up.

E. H. Sothern has more than duplicated last season's success in "If I Were King," with his present production of "The Proud Prince." The first week of his engagement at the Columbia Theatre will show a record-breaking business, and already the advance sale for the second and last week is of immense proportion. Sothern in his great miracle play, in the role of Robert of Sicily, is a most commanding figure. His performance is such as only a great artist like himself could offer. His performance taxes a great amount of strength, and his transformation, while playing the dual role, from Prince to court fool, is stage art in its highest order. "The Proud Prince" is superbly written by Justin Huntly McCarthy, and Sothern has given it a production ranking among the very finest this country has ever seen. The four acts represent stage pictures of completeness, beauty, interest and cleverly blended colorings in costumed effects. There are employed in this production a small army of people, and finer stage management has never before been exemplified in productions seen here. Mr. Sothern's company is a strong one, and cast to the best possible results. Saturday night, June 25th, will see the closing performance of Mr. Sothern's engagement.

Eugenie Thais Lawton has made a great hit as "Zoe," the Octoroon, in the play by Miss Brandon at the Central Theatre. Herschell Mayall also has scored a big success as "Wahnotee," and the large audiences testify to the fine acting and the splendid mounting of the play by generous applause. There are somewhere near one hundred people in the cast, and the scenery is fine.

Russell Brandow is "it" at the Chutes. He is a great favorite. There is a generally fine musical specialty programme by Richard Walsh and Adele Ligon. Alfons, who is an old friend of most vaudeville patrons, gives many new features to his equilibrist act. Jones, Sylvester and Pringle are good old-time minstrels, and their programme has a scent of the old plantation field. There are a number of new attractions in the "Zoo."

The promises made by the management of Fischer's Theatre that "U. S." would be a better entertainment than anything seen at that popular play-house this season, proved to have been made advisably. There is not a dull moment in the show, and the company presenting the piece is worthy of the play itself. There is a genuinely funny comedy all through the three acts, and it keeps the audience in continuous laughter during the performance. It is filled with clever specialties, marches, dances and a host of novelties, and the excellent music is enjoyed by all bright people who possess a modicum of humor in their cold, old hearts. That Miss Edna Aug is a finished artist of the higher class is amply proved by the fact that she has held and impressed her audiences with her splendid specialties to the tune of a dozen recalls at each performance.

During Mrs. Carter's engagement at the Grand Opera House she will play two matinees each week—a regular matinee on Saturdays and a special afternoon presentation of "Du Barry" on Wednesdays. The play is of such uncommon length that the management finds it imperative to raise the curtain on the first act promptly at 8 o'clock in the evenings and at 2 o'clock at the matinees.

There are so many new songs in "The Mormons" at Fischer's that the stage manager has determined that there shall be no encores on this occasion, and the final curtain must fall at half-past ten o'clock. Edna Aug has made such a big hit that she has come to stay, and will introduce new features with every change of play. Yorke and Adams must be seen to be appreciated in their fun, and Edwin Clark and Roy Alton will contribute several new songs. Ben Dillon is always at home in his work, and will cut a big figure in "The Mormons." The Garrity Sisters have been holding back on some of their new dances, which they will introduce. Everything in the way of scenery, the costumes and the stage settings will be new from beginning to end, and the patrons of Fischer's may look for a great production. One of the principal features is the re-appearance of Freda Gallick, who comes back from the East with new laurels. Miss Gallick has been specially engaged to take the prima donna roles until the arrival of Miss Dorothy Morton. Seats are now on sale for two weeks ahead.

The Central Theatre, fresh from its success with the "Octoroon," now in its last nights, is to put on "The Lights o' London." Charles R. Sims, the author, has been called the poet of the people, and we can think of no more suitable drama to put on the Central stage. The Lights o' London should ensure a very large attendance at the popular upper Market street house.

Dorothy Morton has been secured by the management of Fischer's Theatre to open in "The Mormons," which goes on after "U. S." on Monday, June 27th. Miss Morton, next to Lillian Russell, is the highest salaried artist in her line in America.

Charles and Bessie Hart, musical artists, will be at the Chutes this coming week, as will also the Fay sisters, singers and dancers. LaMont's Australian trained cockatoos, and Hattie White, a balladist and song illustrator, will also appear at the popular resort for the first time. Russell Brandow and Stella Wiley, colored comedians, will vary their singing and dancing specialty, and Jones, Sylvester and Pringle, "The Imperials of Minstrelsy," for their third and last week will make an entire change of act.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs

Russia's Internal Dangers.

The importance of events in the Far East has not diminished in any way in the mind of the St. Petersburg Government, but events the past week in European Russia threaten to culminate in such disaster to the empire that for the moment the eyes of the world are fixed upon the Czar rather more than upon his army in Manchuria. Autocrat by inheritance and acquiescence by the people though he be, day by day, the Czar is being circumvented and deprived of opportunity to exercise his authority by the war party. Unfortunately for himself and his country, he is a mental and physical weakling. His country needs a man of iron and blood just now, but he would not be that were he a mental and physical giant, for it is his nature to want peace and a better condition of existence for his people. The Czar of Russia possesses a kind, loving and peaceful disposition, and he would that his country might know only the pursuits of peace. But his hands are tied and his mouth muffled by as bold and as daring and as corrupt Government officials as ever conspired against the administration of justice and human rights. The situation in European Russia is substantially this: The people are shuddering at present and possible future conditions which portend only war abroad and direful internal strifes and bankruptcy at home, and all because the Government of Russia has fallen into the hands of men who are so steeped in crime that they dare not relinquish their hold on the throat of the nation. But they should remember that they are bidding for a revolution that would show them no mercy. Nevertheless, for centuries Russia's rulers have so encouraged disaffection amongst the population that unrest, suspicion and disloyalty have become the normal condition of the people, and speculation the rule in places of public trust.

Japan Still Peggling Away.

Japan's plans of conducting the war are not seriously being interfered with by the Russians, consequently a fresh seal is put upon Port Arthur's fate every day, and it would be no surprise if word should come at any hour that the stronghold had surrendered, but certainly not without a great sacrifice of human beings. General Stoessel would not dare return to Russia if he failed to defend the place to the last, for at best the fall of Port Arthur will try the war party's hold upon the Government to its full strength, and possibly beyond it. In the field proper, General Kuroki continues to mystify and out-general the Russians, and his march inland appears to be governed by mathematical precision. Already he has won the title of the Von Moltke of Asia, though the great German Field Marshal never in any of his campaigns had as many topographical obstructions to overcome, nor so long a line of communication with his base as General Kuroki is and has been confronted by ever since he crossed the Yalu. But, on the other hand, not many Generals have such moral and sympathetic support as the Japanese people are giving to their army and navy commanders, and what is still better, the home support of the masses, as well as in Governmental circles, grows in strength and enthusiasm all the time. Practically all the Japanese Generals and Admirals are Buddhists, and they believe it to be their religious and moral duty to thrash the Russians, and thus create better conditions and more helpful environment for incoming (reincarnated) souls that the Eight-fold Path which leads to Nirvana may not be hedged about by illusions of the physical senses. And it is their religion, too, to entertain no harsh or unkind feelings toward the enemy personally. But they are in no sense religious fanatics.

The Emperor of Thibet has formally declared war against England, and the London Government has raised the Thibetan "peaceful expedition" credit of $200,000 a month to a "war fund" of $1,500,000 a month, which really means as many millions a month as may be required to establish British authority throughout Thibet so firmly and so permanently that its solidity will never be questioned by any nation. In this connection it may be observed that diplomatic circles on the Continent of Europe are trying by all the arts of intrigue and evesdropping to ascertain what England and the United States are likely to demand of Japan for their "neutrality" when the day comes for Russia and Japan to meet to formulate a treaty of peace. But most likely all that was settled, except as to details, before a gun was fired. However, it is not at all likely that either will want or expect more than decidedly favorable commercial privileges upon a lasting basis. Still the Yalu Valley is wide and long and wonderfully fertile, and would make a splendid and desirable field in which to plant colonies from the English-speaking countries, to say nothing of railway concessions and convenient naval stations. Anyway, the statesmen of Continental Europe will find that the Russo-Japanese peace treaty does not antagonize Anglo-Saxon interests at any point. By way of a digression: It has been discovered in Russian financial circles that a number of Russian capitalists who declined to subscribe to the nation's recent loan, have loaded themselves with Japan's new bond issue because they rated the Japan loan as the better and safer investment. It is reported that all of them are likely to spend a season in the Siberian mines for placing stability of Japanese investments ahead of patriotism.

The Thibetans have suffered a severe defeat the past week, but they are as undaunted and determined as ever. One reason for this is the moral support they are getting from St. Petersburg, and a semi-official report that Russia is mobilizing an army corps on the frontier of Thibet to be marched against the "Anglo-Saxon invaders." The other nations, including China, whose Emperor is the suzerain of Thibet, seem to have made up their minds that Thibet is already as good as a British dependency, and will let it stand that way. It is pretty evident that Japan believes that it is no longer in need of China's support, and is discouraging any violation of that nation's neutrality proclamation; at the same time it is very clear that Japan's influence is the dominating factor in China's every-day political life. But no student of present national and international conditions and relations in the Far East will be surprised at that, nor that the day is coming when Japan and China will meet to divide certain loaves and fishes.

Pleasure's Wand.

Commencing with Monday, June 27th, a hilariously funny burlesque is to follow "U. S." It is called "The Mormons," and was written expressly for the present cast at Fischer's. The management states that it is overflowing with novelties and new ideas. Seats are now on sale for the first two weeks. The famous burlesque queen, Dorothy Morton, will make her first appearance on this occasion.

Genial, whole-souled John Morrisey will tell you stories about St. Louis and the Fair for the asking. He and Mrs. Morrisey have just returned from the metropolis of the "show me's." They report a brief and enjoyable trip.

There are many who will remember Createore, the great band leader, and they will be pleased to know that the exponent of the ecstatic and erratic in musical batonnerie is to be with us again. He will be here during the coming season, and his success should be as great as it has been in the East. Createore is the man who thrills. He lifts orchestra and audience out of themselves into the heights of musical elysian.

Miss Joanna Barilli is the prima donna soprano with Createore. She is a splendid creature, who is possessed of a most charming stage presence. She is a member of the famous Barilli-Patti family, and has studied under the best Italian masters.

Helen Bertram, late of the Bostonians, opens at the Orpheum the coming week, making her first vaudeville appearance in this city. Her voice is said to be better than ever, and if this is so, she should be an immediate and an immense success. Howe and Scott are Hebrew cake-walkers. This is something new, and it ought to be a drawing card for the great vaudeville house. Mlle. Agoust and Charles Weston continue with us, and we are glad they do, as they are clever artists and very popular. They have made a great hit in their comedy and juggling act. There is a new act on the Orpheum boards which should be of great interest to all Californians and San Franciscans in particular. It is the moving pictures taken recently of the review of the fire department.

"Lovers' Lane" has been selected as the play with which to finish the regular stock season at the Alcazar. Considering that this is the last opportunity to see the clever members of this company in their present relation to one another, and because the ladies and gentlemen of the Alcazar stock have endeared themselves to the San Francisco public, "Lovers' Lane" is sure to be greeted with crowded houses. Adele Belgarde is to re-appear, and she may be sure of a heart-felt salutation from the public. She is well liked. The members are all congenially cast, and we may rest assured of a fine performance.

White Whittlesey opens on the twenty-seventh in Richard Harding Davis's "Soldiers of Fortune." The mere announcement should crowd the house.

"Robin Hood," on a scale never before attempted, is to be put on at the Lyvoli. There are to be a number of new people, and the cast is said to be an exceptionally fine one, and will include Kate Condon, who bears a splendid reputation as contralto. Edith Mason is well known here, and needs no words of praise. Barron Berthold is another great favorite wherever he has appeared, and he sang a long time with the "Bostonians." Willard Sims appears as a comedian and he also brings with him a great deal of the press and public's commendation. John Duns-muire will officiate as the basso profundo.

My friend, George Tyler, of Liebler & Co., is back in God's country again, and he informs me he has closed a number of engagements while abroad that are sure to make sensations. He closed for a. American season with Madame Gabrielle Rejane, the idol of Paris. She will bring her own productions and her own selected company of artists.

Liebler & Co. are now playing: Eleanore Robson in "Merely Mary Ann"; Edward Morgan in the "Eternal City"; Signor Ermete Novelli with an exceptionally fine company of Italian actors, who will represent "La Morte Civile," "Louis XI," and a selection of Shakespearean plays. Kyrle Bellew, in "Raf fles," Ezra Kendall in a new play by Edward E. Kid-der, and a capable company presenting a dramatiza-tion of Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." It is a pleasure to be able to say that many of these attrac-tions are programmed to take in San Francisco.

—The appetizing things that come from the broiler at Moraghan's Grill, in the California Market, are responsible for the crowd that goes there for luncheon. It has become a regular business men's exchange. The quality of the chops, steaks, oysters and game served cannot be surpassed. More than that, the wants of the guests are attended to by perfectly trained waiters.

THE ASSAULT ON MESSRS. SHERMAN AND GEISSLER.

The row at the North Shore ferry depot on the occasion of the enforcement of the new order that all Sausalitans must be aboard the boat at sharp sailing hour is only the happening of the expected. The man Creed, who officiated as the chief bouncer of the company, had about the slightest imaginable idea of his duties. A bumptious bumpkin, possessed of more brawn than brain, and on many an occasion previous to this one, had conclusively, and, apparently to his own satisfaction, proven his efficiency.

It is to be hoped the company has rid itself of the gentleman's services permanently, and thus has, in a measure, taught him to differentiate between the Sunday hoodlum element and the gentle and submissive suburbanite. The suburbanite needs no attention from such men as Creed. A simple ringing of a bell about one minute before gate closing will obviate all difficulties, if coupled with a respectfully worded announcement posted in a conspicuous place. The suburbanite is the backbone of the North Shore road, and it is not wise to add another disheartening element to those that already confront the resident in the rhubarbian districts through the continued inflection of the "bombasto furioso," whose Creed is the rough house pattern.

OUR RAGGED CARMEN.

In conversation with an Eastern visitor, it was developed that the United Railways is being very generally criticised for the slouchy and ragged appearance of its platform men and conductors. San Franciscans are so used to seeing the carmen in the garb of tramps and bearing the appearance of a section of Coxey's army that this condition arouses scarcely any local comment. The men aver that they cannot afford new uniforms because the cost is from twenty-five to thirty-five dollars for each man. The company states, it is said, that it has no desire to enforce any rule regarding uniforms because it does not wish to lend the men a pretext on which to hang another strike agitation. In regard to the price of the uniforms of the men, it occurs to us that it is excessive. The militia and the United States army are better clothed than are the carmen, at about one-third the price. The United Railways Company should make an arrangement by which a continued contract with some reputable firm would enable the men to secure uniforms at cost, or very nearly cost. A good uniform with leather re-enforcement to the pockets should not cost more than $15.

The August number of the Overland Monthly is to be devoted, in a great measure, to the "Triennial Encampment of the Knights Templar" in San Francisco. There will be the usual amount of standard fiction, a number of descriptive pieces, and an elaborate article on the great musical organization for male voices, "The Loring Club." The Overland Monthly is fast becoming as popular as it was in the days of gold, the days of Bret Harte, when it was, as truly as it is to-day, the only literary magazine in the West. Since September, the news-stand sales have trebled, and there have been thousands of names added to the subscription list. The circulation record has now passed the fifty thousandth mark.

BY THE AUTOCRANK

The Automobile Club of Los Angeles is trying a scheme which seems to be an interesting proposition. They are holding matinees on the race track of that city.

From the reports from the South, they are run off in an informal way. There is no set programme, but when there are enough vehicles present to make a class, they are sent around the track. There is no stripping of the cars, but they are started in the condition they come to the track. It is on the lines of the old-time trotting events, when an owner drove out to the track and had a brush with his friends in his road ride.

The contest does not always go to the swiftest under these circumstances, but the amount of pleasure to be gained out of such intercourse cannot be measured. It will bring about that feeling of good-fellowship which has been the ground work yarn of the speedway.

Frank A. Garbutt, the enthusiastic automobilist of Los Angeles, gave his new 60-horsepower automobile, designed by himself, a test last Saturday. The trial took place on the Ascot Park track, at the matinee of the Automobile Club of Southern California. He made the mile in 1:15 flat, and was pleased with the result.

"Under present conditions," said he, after his speedy trip, "I hardly dare let the machine out to its full capacity. It has a great deal more in it than I have brought out so far, of that I am convinced. But till I get thoroughly used to it and can tell just how it will act on the corners, I shall hold down to practically the speed shown."

The Automobile Club will give another matinee to-day at Ascot Park track, Los Angeles.

By the time the News Letter is in the hands of its readers, the great Gordon-Bennett race will have become a matter of history. This year there is no American representative.

Greater New York is having a hard time trying to protect its automobilists. The lawless element of the city has taken to throwing stones, which in many cases has resulted in death. It is merely the repetition of what has happened when any radical innovation has been made in transportation. The savage instinct is never dead.

There are a lot of professional and amateur drivers who are responsible for this condition. They drive over roads at a pace that almost kills the ordinary citizen with fright. It is very amusing to come along behind some unsuspecting fellowman and give a toot on the horn, which causes him to do funny stunts for a second. It is not so funny to the man, and ever afterwards he does not think kindly of the automobile.

The best time for a race meet of the Automobile Club of California is when the Knights Templar convale is being held in the city. The officers of the club should secure the track at once, for there undoubtedly will be other attractions that will want Ingleside at that time.

Automobile parties are making the Hotel Vendome one of their objective points in tours from San Francisco in increasing numbers. One of these parties, which arrived last week, was composed of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Starr, of Grass Valley, and Miss Bourn of San Francisco. This party has been on a several months' tour in their White touring car, having already traveled as far south as San Diego.

Jim Budd, says the Stockton Record, has given up his $12,000 French Mors auto, which took California by the ears some time ago, and now has a White.

J. P. Bauman, of Stockton, California, is contemplating purchasing a White steam automobile in the near future.

The following persons made tours to different sections of the country on Sunday in Pope-Toledo touring cars, and all report a most enjoyable trip: L. P. Lowe, Colonel E. F. Preston and family, E. E. Peabody and friends, M. A. Gunst and family, George P. Fuller and party, M. C. Harris and friends.

Mr. Houghton, the White agent in Santa Cruz, accompanied by L. D. Estep and three others, made the run to San Francisco last week in a White touring car. After remaining here a day seeing the sights, the party left again for Santa Cruz by the auto route.

There is no greater evidence of the fact that the high grade motor car is the need for California than the large number of orders now on file with the Pope-Toledo Touring Car Company for the four-cylinder car. Mr. Boyer reports that it is difficult for the factory to get the cars out rapidly enough to supply the demand. All owners of this car are rejoicing over the success of the car in all hill-climbing contests in the East. Mr. Boyer is very much elated over the receipt of a telegram just received from the Pope Motor Car Company, which reads as follows:

Pope-Toledo Touring Car Company, 134 Golden Gate Avenue, San Francisco:

"Pope-Toledo won first, second, third, Minneapolis hill-climbing contest, touring car class, distance one hundred sixty-two feet, over half a mile, eleven per cent grade, defeating all leading American makes of cars, in fifty-nine seconds flat, also first in stripped free-for-all class, breaking all records twenty-four seconds; time, fifty-one and four-fifths seconds. Pope-Toledo won five miles open touring car class, carrying four passengers, Indianapolis, Saturday. Also made fastest time in five mile handicap open-to-all classes, winning.

Alexander Young, of Honolulu, is in San Francisco. He has purchased a White touring car, and will soon take it to the Islands, where he intends to do quite a bit of touring.

Among the White users out last Sunday were L. P. Lowe, H. P. Teichner, Miss Katherine Dillon, Miss Grace Spreckels and George H. Lent. Mr. Lent and Miss Spreckels and Miss Dillon all drove their steamers across the bay.

The Knox Automobile Company seems to be losing favor in this locality. This is to be regretted, as it is a standard machine. Something should be done to again reinstate this automobile in popular favor. It is said by some that the personal unpopularity of the local agent has had much to do with the present state of affairs. If this is a fact, the company, in self-protection, should place the agency in other hands than Leavitt's.

Mr. G. O. Heine, of the Heine Piano Company, of this city, has just returned from an extended trip throughout the Eastern States, visiting all the principal automobile factories. Mr. Heine has secured the agency for the famous Sintz car, built by the Sintz Automobile Co. of Detroit. He has also secured the agency of the "Queen" automobile, on the Pacific Coast. These cars, containing, two and four cylinders, are considered by Mr. Heine to be among the highest power cars for their size and price now in the market.

Mr. Heine states that he expects to open an exclusive automobile factory in Cincinnati, and will build two types of machines. The models of these machines are being constructed by Victor Emerson, who built the fastest boat engine in the world. The first model will be a 70-horsepower machine of the very latest type, with the new style transmission, which is said to be far superior to anything invented. He expects the first model out by the 1st of September.

Sunday morning, at 4:30, Cuyler Lee and Arthur Hull left Del Monte for 12th and Broadway, Oakland, in an attempt to beat their previous record of 5 hours and 38 minutes. At Gilroy they were 22 minutes ahead of their previous trip. The heat was something terrific, and twelve miles out of Gilroy one of the tires blew out, and it took so much time to make this repair that it was then impossible to finish the run within the record time, so they went along slowly and arrived in Oakland at 12 o'clock m. Had they known how hot it was going to be, they would not have attempted the run that day.

At last the Oldsmobile Company have begun to make shipments West. The Pioneer Automobile Company have five carloads of machines en route from Detroit.

At the automobile races which were held at Ingleside track on Sunday last, S. D. Hewson, in John Breuner's new 1904 Winton touring car, turned the tables on Max L. Rosenfeld, in Scott & Blakeslee's 1904 Winton touring car, by defeating him in a two-mile race. Hewson won the poll after the first turn, and held his lead through the two miles. It was a very pretty race. In the three mile handicap race there were entered two Fords, one Rambler and two Stevens-Duryea machines, as well as the motor car mentioned above. The race was won by Calvin C. Eib in a Stevens-Duryea machine, which led at the finish by over a quarter of a mile. Viddy, in a Ford stripped for racing, came in second, and closely pressed F. A. Lathe in a Stevens-Duryea. Next came a Ford driven by Joseph Holley.

Mr. P. L. Pettigrew toured around the bay in his Winton touring car on Sunday last. Miss Georgie Spieker drove her Winton car through the Park and Presidio on Sunday last. Miss Elsie McEwen made a trip around the bay last Sunday.

"Health Hints"

(The San Francisco Board of Health intends to publish a bulletin entitled "Health Hints for the Household."—Daily Paper.)

There will be a little volume, I have heard—

A volume with a title most absurd,
Which, with ardor that's pathetic,
On matters dietetic,

And on subjects sanitary it has dared;
And the "it," which is not publishing by stealth,
Is the famous San Francisco Board of Health,
And the San Francisco Board of Health's a "bird."

It will tell us how to test for doubtful milk,
It will notify in language soft as silk
Of all the nasty creatures
Who conceal their horrid features,
And the different ways that dairymen can bilk;
It will give a disquisition on the cow,
Her hair, her hoofs, her udder, and just how
To make it quite a pleasure
To milk a gallon measure—
There are other things it will not tell us now.

Thus, it will not tell us how a dairy dank
Can grow wholesome, and a dirty water tank
Supply the purest diet,
Nor what keeps the office quiet;
And it will not tell just how the little bank
Account of a health officer may grow,
For that would not be literary, so
The active Board of Health,
Which is virtuous by stealth,
Will not even mention bribery—oh, no!

It will tell us how to wash and how to dress,
And in truth it would be difficult to guess
The amount of good advice
We have recognized as nice,
Ever since we were small babies, more or less.
It will give a heap of fussy little hints
On matters that the rest of us would mince,
But brave as it may be,
There are other things, you'll see,
That pucker up its two lips like a quince.

Thus we shall not hear a solitary sentence
On the wickedness of officers who take Small bribes, and never show the least repentance
For their winking at the plumber's little fake.
The little fake that sends the noxious gases—
That send to Heaven so many of our folk.
Does the Board of Health imagine we are asses,
Or is the book intended as a joke?

—Roland Whittle.

The California Club

Boys who are saving their pennies for the purchase of toy pistols when the "glorious Fourth" arrives a few weeks hence, are quite unconscious of the conspiracy that is making to deprive them of the dangerous pleasure that is sure to claim its quota of legs and arms and fingers and hands and eyes and ears. All over the Union there is a movement toward the extermination of this menace to the boys of the land, but in this city the lead has been taken by the civic department of the California Club, the big organization of women who are busying themselves with a great variety of matters for the betterment of conditions generally, but especially as they concern women and children.

Fourth of July casualties have grown to such an alarming extent that the physicians of the country have gone to no end of trouble to furnish statistics for the use of the propaganda that is now well under way. Papers which have been printed in the Journal of the American Medical Association have been compiled in pamphlet form for general distribution. This part of the work is regarded as educational. A number of the pamphlets have been sent to the California Club, and they are being placed where they will do the most good. The practical part of the work for the present will be the endeavor upon the part of those who have appointed for themselves this work, to see that existing laws are enforced.

The committee of the civic department of the California Club entrusted with this matter has acquainted itself with the laws of this municipality relative to the sale of toy pistols and blank cartridges, and will try to have them enforced. As the question was not taken up until recently, the committee expects to do little more than educational work this year; it expects to arouse mothers and fathers from their apathy, and dealers to a recognition of the ordinances.

A large number of tetanus cases occur among the children of the poorly educated, so the workers are justified in establishing the educational propaganda. The dangers of lockjaw are not generally understood. Statistics show that there are fewer cases of tetanus in the Southern States, because the use of blank cartridges is not a custom in that section. In the summing up of the Fourth of July casualties, this State has its unenviable record, so the California Club has work to do.

California may congratulate itself on the fact that its Supreme Court is not affected by the yellow press and its friends, the labor leaders. William Buckley, unionist and murderer, must hang. This decision should have a deterrent effect on the union element in San Francisco, who are now engaged in riot and murderous assaults on the non-union help of the stable owners. "Kid Egan" may now reflect that he was, by a merciful Providence, saved from the rope. If he escapes with the limit of the law, by a long penal sentence, he can still thank his stars. It is especially gratifying to read of this decision, when one thinks of the strong fight made in favor of this miserable wretch, Buckley, and that it had no effect on the courts.

Labor Unions and Their Follies

The principles of labor unionism are ethically right because they provide for the evolvement of labor to higher levels of personal well-being and individual opportunity. Nor are the principles of organized labor something new. They are co-existent with man's emergence from barbarism. Ancient Babylon, India, Greece, Rome and Egypt had their labor guilds or unions, and all the way down through the Middle Ages, to the present time, every generation had its organizations of labor, ostensibly, as these great movements proclaimed, to "resist the tyranny of organized capital," but in reality, for the most part, to enable a few leaders to live and prosper on the misfortunes of the rank and file of their associations. Nevertheless, the principles of labor unionism have stood, and will forever stand, as the loom upon which the law of evolution weaves the fabric of character, worth and selfhood, but it is not the fault of these principles if men persist in feeding the loom with warp and woof that is discolored and rotten. The true principles of labor unionism are born of the eternal truth of the interdependence of employer and employee, and that in ratio to their mutual helpfulness in their joint endeavor to transform raw material into finished product is the warp and the woof of their fabric substantial, accumulative and satisfying. By nature, capital should be labor's best friend, and by the same law labor should be capital's best friend. The one is worthless without the other, and antagonisms are assassins of both. And yet in all ages bitter and deadly antagonisms have injected themselves in between these, the greatest of all factors in human progress, but always there is profit accruing to a few labor leaders by whose perfidy and treachery antagonisms are purposely wrought out and scattered that they may live upon the wrecks they have caused. These breeders of hatreds, misunderstandings and suspicions are venomous, blood-sucking parasites on the body economic, body politic and body domestic of union laborism, and since they have no source other than the misfortunes of their fellows from which to accumulate personal and private property gain, it is apparent that peace and harmony between capital and labor are exactly what they would not have obtained.

Effects of the Walking Delegate.

There are several "brands" of these disturbing elements in the industrial world, but the one that feeds upon the blood of labor and never labors with his own hands, is the walking delegate. He is a versatile genius degradation. He is at once a slimy snake, a ferocious tiger, a vile hyena, a brutal tyrant and a cringing sycophant, and all the time he is a moral, social and industrial disease germ seeking lodgment in capital or in labor, or in both, that he may cause mental sores only to be cured by actual or metaphorical bludgeons, stones, pistols, fires, dynamite and assassinations. He fully realizes that peace and good will between employer and employee would mean work or starvation for himself, and all the cunning and treachery of his nature is ever setting employee against employer, and employer against employee. He is a walking delegate from the destructive forces in industrial life, and his stock in trade is agitation, strife and ill-will between labor and capital.

But for the walking delegate and those higher in labor councils who make his existence possible, the conservative, and therefore the honest and thoughtful element in the field of labor, would find no difficulty in applying the true principles of unionism, which are, as has been stated, recognition of the law of interdependence and mutual support of labor and capital, for capital is always ready to eliminate hurtful or threatening influences from its channels of employment. Capital is always suspicious and timid, whether it be the millions of the capitalist or the week's wage of labor. And although the conservative element in labor unions is numerically the weaker side, it has the integrity and moral sense of the organization, and it could, if it would place all the labor guilds upon such close relations with capital both sides would be anxious to even anticipate possible friction and deprive it of its hurtful threatenings. Not all labor organizations are controlled by schemers and agitators, and those that are not nearly always succeed in adjusting their differences with capital upon an equitable basis without so much as jarring the machinery of their joint efforts for the good of both.

Labor Union Trusts.

When labor unions form a trust, as the building trades have, or when they assume to be superior to law and property and individual rights, as they do when they undertake to cripple the police power of the State, or when they plunge into lawlessness, as they are doing in Colorado, and have done many times before in other sections of the country they forfeit the good opinion and sympathy of the public, no matter how just and ethically right their original demand for more reasonable conditions of employment might have been. No labor strike has ever succeeded in America that did not have the moral sense and the sympathy of the public, and no strike has ever retained the public's good will after the strikers had defied the law and denied the sovereign right of the citizen to individually enter the labor market and contract for his own services. Justice, personal liberty and the right of individual pursuit of work and happiness are the essence of the genius of our Government, as they are the bone, the sinew and the spirit of the principles of true labor unionism.

It follows, then, that the reason why labor strikes are not more frequently averted by labor and capital coming together and adjusting their differences upon an equitable basis by first recognizing their interdependence, is because walking delegates and their co-conspirators, who live on the spoils of discontent and agitation, inflame the mind of labor by falsehood and hypocrisy, and the mind of capital by threatening its safety until the blood runs hot in the veins of both, when hatred hoists the black flag of destruction. It is safe to say that there has never been a lawless labor strike in the United States that was not instigated and urged forward by walking delegates and their abettors in labor councils—men who thrive best when their fellows are in distress. How long, then, is the real brain, the real manhood, the high character and the strong moral sense—the conservative element—of labor organizations going to be pulled by the nose into destructive conditions to please the vanity and line the pocket-books of walking delegates and their equally unsavory and disreputable "superior officers?" In the language of slang, "It is up to" honest, sober, intelligent and conservative labor to say "how long."

The Real Force.

Trades unions were founded for a beneficent purpose, and have improved the condition of the worker. This has been accomplished partly by public opinion, which is naturally friendly to the cause of labor, says the Labor Arbiter of Los Angeles. While the original purpose of trades unions continues, the methods now commonly pursued have brought about a change of mind in the public, and caused employers everywhere to organize against the unions. The public generally condemns labor unionism because of the crimes and tyrannies that too frequently mark its conduct, and the employers propose to resist its encroachments, knowing that they have the public support. These two forces, public opinion and capital, constitute a power which can crush labor unionism at any time, and this is what will happen in the near future, unless there is a radical change in policy, and a different class of men is put in command of union affairs.

The evils of trades unionism are to be laid at the door of the "walking delegate" or "business agent," his official associates and their immediate following in the ranks.

The means the walking delegate uses to force employers are sometimes criminal, at other times diabolical, and nearly always lawless. Nothing is too contemptible for him to stoop to, no sacrifice too great to impose upon honest working people, while the contest is on. With few exceptions, the walking delegate is a man without scruple, and if trades unions would be saved, both he and his immediate following must be banished from the fold.

Demolli, the Agitator.

The Overland Monthly, in its issue of last February, gives some light on the character and life of Demolli, the foreign agitator at the head of the Miners' Union in Utah and Colorado, as follows:

"Opposed to law and order and to any Government restraint, opposed to all authority except the authority of the Miners' Union, as represented by himself, and opposed to Governor Wells, stands the leader of the miners, Charles Demolli, a foreigner banished from Europe in 1895 for sedition and anarchy, he now seeks to foment disorder in the United States. Until his advent in Utah the miners were quite content with their condition. Governor Wells has taken sides with neither of the contestants, and has been impartial in all his acts. He has firmly opposed anarchy and has earned the undying antipathy of the Finns, Huns, Slavs, Italians and other foreigners who form a majority of the miners' unions of Utah. Demolli is not an uneducated man. He received an academic education in Milan; served in the Italian army as a Sergeant, and was as refractory in military service as he has ever been in private life. He is over six feet in height, and is remarkably well developed as an athlete."

HUMAN NATURE.

An illustration of the extraordinary close-fistedness of King Leopold was brought out during the recent legal proceedings instituted against him by his daughter, Stephanie, when it was shown that the small souvenirs, in the shape of trinkets, miniatures and bric-a-brac bequeathed by the late Queen Henriette to her ladies and gentlemen-in-waiting, and to her attendants, some of whom had been in her service for a quarter of a century or more, were not handed over to them until they had paid the regular succession duties on them, which in no case amounted to omre than a few dollars. When remonstrated with on the subject, Leopold explained that he could not, as king, encourage a disregard of the revenue laws by relieving the legatees from the payment of the tax, while it did not apparently occur to him that in common decency he should have defrayed the amount himself.

A STULTIFIED PROFESSOR.

It is noticed that the "Society of American Wars" has passed a resolution of fulsome commendation of Secretary of War Taft, because of his services as Civil Governor of the Philippines.

David Starr Jordan, M. D., LL. D., X. Y. Z., L. M. N. O. P. Q., is on the "Council" of the institution, whatever that may be, and we are wondering how he can satisfy a yearning public when it recollects that he has spent much of his time quite recently discrediting the acts of the Government in the Philippines. As Taft was the executive officer of the said Government, said Taft is now endorsed by the very man who did his best to spoil the good work he now (Jordan) commends. Our columns are open.

A CANDIDATE FOR WALKING DELEGATE.

"Did yez ever make any money backing horses, Mulligan?"

"Sure, Oi made a hundred dollars once?"

"How did youse do ut?"

"Oi backed him down a cillar awn thin sued th' mon for laving the dure open!"

"I understand," said Mr. Stavlate, "that a Western genius is perfecting an apparatus by means of which a person's face may be seen miles away." "Well," replied Miss Patience Gonne, "it certainly will be a boon to see some faces there, if they can only be kept there."

NO RELATION OF HIS.

A thin, nervous-looking man stepped up to the pastor as the latter came down from the pulpit.

"You have had a good deal to say this morning," he observed, "about a feller that killed a man named Abel."

"Certainly," replied the pastor. "The Sin of Cain' was the subject of my discourse.

"I wish you'd do me the favor next Sunday," said the thin man, in some excitement, "to tell the folks that the man you were talking about this morning ain't no relation to the Kane that keeps a livery stable down by the mill. I don't want none of my friends to think that I had a hand in that killin'. That's all. Good-day."

week. Isn't it a pity, for the good of the nation, that these two patriots were not provided with Gatling guns and a padded chamber and there allowed to fight it out? It is now in order for Budd to tell his own story of how he fell out with Hearst and why Hearst refused to pay the little soubrette's bill, and how the compromise was finally effected between these statesmen. The story ought to be told by Budd, because the other side is telling some of the most wonderful yarns to which any one ever gave ear.

Results in the Spanish, Japanese and Russian navies indicate clearly that what is needed most is a convertible vessel—one that will be a first-class battleship while on top of the water, and when a chance shell pierces its armor will sink gently beneath the water and become a first-class submarine boat.

Didactic Mamma—Now, then, Charlie, don't you admire my new silk dress? Charlie (with emphasis)—Yes, mamma. Didactic Mother—And, Charlie, all the silk is provided for us by a poor worm Charlie—Do you mean dad?

"I can't make you out at all," he said angrily; "you are so fickle and changeable. You're just a riddle to me." "Yes?" replied his fiance. "Since you're so stupid, perhaps you'd better give me up."

Mabel—I do believe Miss Bonds is in love with that poor young lawyer. Clara—What a shame! And she would make such a good wife for some fellow who was marrying for money.

"How many children have Mr. and Mrs. Flyer?" "Oh, they live at Newport, you know."

"A woman can't keep a secret," declares the mere man. "Oh, I don't know," retorts the fluttery lady. "I've kept my age a secret since I was twenty-four." "Yes, but one of these days you will give it away. In time you will simply have to tell it." "Well, I think that when a woman has kept a secret for twenty years she comes pretty near knowing how to keep it."—Judge.

Patient—What are the things I must avoid, doctor? Physician—Pork, mackerel, tea, coffee, oatmeal, rye— Patient (with a gasp)—Rye? Physician—In the form of bread. Patient—All right, doctor. Go on.

Elderly Adviser—I am glad you dislike slangy young men. Miss Quickstep—You bet I do! That's why I had to shake Fatty Feather-top. I told him I wasn't going to stand for any of his hash-counter dialect any longer, if I knew myself, and I reether guessed I did, all right, all right.

Algy—Weally, I—aw—have a notion to—aw—blow me bwains out, doncher know. "Indeed! Well, in case you do, I'd advise you not to say anything about it afterward, and nobody will ever suspect what you have done."

Towne—Why do you call her an amateur actress? She's on the regular stage. Browne—I mean that she has only been married to one man and she lives with him yet.

How often the people applaud when you do not approve.

Servant's Visitor—Your missus used to work out herself, didn't she? Servant—Yes, but it must have been a long time ago, for she never orders me around much.

Wedderly—Politics in our ward is certainly in an awful condition. Mrs. Wedderly—Then why don't they get one of those ward heelers to doctor it?

First Microbe—So he had to choose between love and money? Second Microbe—Yes; he couldn't decide whether to live on a kiss or a dollar bill.

Tess—It was Maud Singleton, wasn't it, who won the gold medal for her graduation essay on "Woman's Right to Public Office" last year? Jess—Gracious! Not last year. It was two years ago, at least. Tess—Are you sure? Jess—Positive, because I saw her baby cutting his teeth on that medal the other day.

THE WORLD'S FAIR.

—In the Red Room, or Ladies' Reception Hall, in the southeast corner of the House of Hoo Hoo, the flooring, walls and furniture are all made of redwood from the Pacific Coast. The lower part of the walls are of redwood panels 42 inches wide. Above the panels the walls are decorated with hand-painted scenes from the redwood forests. In the center of the room stands a large table carved from a redwood tree, with ferns, mushrooms and a typical California bear adorning the trunk. The cover is a large oval buhrl. The room was designed and decorated by Mrs. Abbie E. Klebs, of the Pacific Coast Lumbermen's Association, assisted by Mrs. S. V. Culp, of San Francisco.

—The first cherries of the season received in the Palace of Horticulture were exhibited in the California section May 20th. They came by express and were in good condition. A special exhibit from San Bernardino County of oranges, lemons, pomelos and apples, was also placed in this section to-day.

—A plastic relief map of San Bernardino County has been added to the California exhibit in the Palace of Horticulture. Small trees indicate where the orchards are planted, and in each tree is an incandescent electric light illuminating the picture. The map also shows how the orchards are irrigated.

—In the manufacture of chandeliers the Germans take a front place in the world, and some of their recent accomplishments in this line are shown in the German section of the Palace of Liberal Arts.

—The grinding of photographic-lenses is well shown in the Palace of Liberal Arts, where the leading manufacturer of these goods has on exhibition a machine which is engaged in grinding lenses for use in cameras. With this machine several lenses can be ground at the same time.

—Fifteen tons of garnets from Alaska are to be brought to the Alaskan Building at the World's Fair and to be given away to visitors as souvenirs of the Alaskan exhibit.

—One of the finest of the French exhibits in the Palace of Liberal Arts is that of house furnishings. A part of the space has been arranged into about thirty small rooms, each of these rooms being entirely furnished with the finest carpets, hangings and furniture from the leading French makers. Much of the furniture has been copied from that which has been owned and used by the French monarchs of past centuries, and the styles of all the periods of French history are faithfully reproduced.

—The California delegation of newspaper men who are going to St. Louis to attend the World's Press Parliament next week, will reach that city Sunday night. There are ninety in the party, and quarters have been engaged for them at the Inside Inn by E. D. Willis, secretary of the California Commission. On Wednesday of next week they will hold the semi-annual meeting of the California Press Association in the big hall of the California Building.

—You'll never regret a visit to Zinkand's, which is the best of San Francisco's after-the-theatre resorts. It serves the most tempting dishes, the best liquors, inspiring music, and is patronized by the smart set.

—Allen's Press Clipping Bureau has removed to the rooms formerly occupied by Bradstreet's, at 230 California street; San Francisco.

—Tesla Briquettes, the popular domestic fuel, are only $7.50 per ton; half ton $4; quarter ton $2. Full weight guaranteed. In economy, cleanliness and heat producing qualities Briquettes are superior to coal. Sold only by the Tesla Coal Company, 10th and Channel. Phone South 98.

The Political Situation

The Oakland Tribune has a correspondent in this town, who, notwithstanding his non-de-plume (The Knave) is really a very nice fellow, who writes some very bright things. Sometimes, however, like other less talented scribblers, he is in a hurry to get his copy to the printer, and consequently writes in haste what he has to correct at leisure. In his letter of June 4th, he discusses Oxnard's strength in the next State Senate, and makes some very curious mistakes, all the more extraordinary that they appear in the Tribune, which, as everybody knows, has George Hatton, the professional Senatorial manager, for its political guide, and therefore ought to be especially well posted. "The Knave" tells his readers, for instance, that "if Robert Corlett is sent back from Napa to the State Senate, he would be likely to take the programme as easily as a child takes candy," which may or may not be true, but evidently "The Knave" does not know much about the district, for a little further on in his letter he says that he knows nothing of J. J. Lucksinger's Solano district, which shows that he is unaware of the fact that Napa and Solano Counties are in the same district. The fact that Frank Devlin, formerly District Attorney of Solano County, is the candidate of the Solano people against Corlett, and that Congressman Metcalf is said to be backing Devlin, possibly with an eye on the United States Senate to succeed Perkins four years hence. Again, we are told that W. B. Lardner may be sent back from Placer County, and J. J. Tyrell from Nevada, which is hardly possible, as both counties are in the same district, and therefore must have the same Senator. By the way, the News Letter announced a month and more ago that the name of the probable Senator from that district, the third, would be F. M. Rutherford, and not either Lardner or Tyrell; in fact, Tyrell has publicly announced that he is not a candidate. Again, the Tribune's correspondent thinks that if the Hays Brothers name the successor of Louis Oneal in Santa Clara that their candidate will be opposed to Abe Ruef and an anti-programmer, which shows that "The Knave" is not well posted on Santa Clara politics, for if he were, he would know that Ruef is one of the most trusted friends and advisors of the Hayses, and that there is no one whose advice on "rouge et noir" is more highly valued than that of the San Francisco boss. It may be set down for certain that their nominee will be perfectly acceptable to Ruef. "The Knave" has not heard who is likely to be the successor to the late Senator Byrnes of San Mateo, though the readers of the News Letter were told months ago that Assemblyman Brown, the greatest kicker in the Legislature, wanted the place and would probably get it. We are told by "The Knave" that Senator Ralston has no particular love for Bard, which is true, since Bard opposed Ralston's aspirations to succeed John P. Irish as Naval Officer, but although Ralston was assisted in his fight for that office by ex-Senator Felton, he will not, as "The Knave" suggests, endeavor to upset all precedent by proposing Felton's name as the successor of Bard. Felton comes from the North and the next Senator will undoubtedly come from South of the Tehachapi, and Felton knows that as well as any one. Corney Pendleton, we are told, also, used to have offices adjoining those of John W. Mitchell in Los Angeles, and as Mitchell, a rabid Southern Democrat is booming Jim Lankersheim for the Senatorship, Pendleton, who is one of the most pronounced programmers in the State, is going to go back on his whole record and vote for Lankersheim to please Mitchell. Evidently "The Knave" does not know Corney very well if he fancies that Mitchell could have such a tremendous influence over him. Corney might control Mitchell if there was any object in it, but Mitchell control Pendleton! Never. "The Knave," as I said, is a good fellow, and if he read the News Letter more attentively, his political news and political tips would be more reliable.

Discussing the next Legislature it may be of interest to mention that Gen. F. C. Prescott of Redlands, who made a very good record in the last Assembly, has concluded not to be a candidate for the Senatorship to succeed the late Senator O. Z. Hubbell, but will be a candidate again for the Lower House. If he is re-elected, as he no doubt will be, he will be a candidate for Speaker. In the Fourth District, composed of Shasta, Modoc and Lassen Counties, T. H. Shanahan, who was a Democrat until he found it more advantageous to be a Populist, and who was the candidate of the latter party for Governor in 1893, wants to return to the Assembly next winter. He is now a Hearst Democrat. The District gave Grotefend, Democrat, 3,215 votes in 1902, to 2,655 for his Republican opponent, and Grotefend could probably be elected again, but he will not accept the nomination. Shanahan has an opponent in the Democratic ranks, J. A. Hubbard, a contractor of Anderson; Shanahan comes from Redding. The Republicans, who want the nomination are J. H. Beecher and J. H. Creighton. They could only hope to win on a split in the Democratic ranks, but that seems likely if Shanahan wins the nomination, as his record hurts him with the straight-out Democrats, and his standing in with Hearst does not add to his political popularity. Hubbard is the man who ran against Senator Coggins last election, and was only beaten by 18 votes. He is a straight-out Democrat, and does not change his politics annually.

In the Fifth Assembly District, Seward is dead, and there are two candidates for his place—H. S. Gans of Red Bluff who was his predecessor, and J. Hail, editor of the Plumas National-Bulletin. The district gave Seward a majority of 528, and is good for a Republican Assemblyman, so it is doubtful if the Democrats will make any nomination, especially if Gans, who is personally popular, is nominated. In the Eleventh District, McKenney is certain to get the nomination again, and equally certain of being elected. He made a good record, and as his district gave him 518 majority, notwithstanding the open opposition of the Administration of the Ione Reform School this year, he ought to do even better, as they are not doing nearly as much politics at the School as they did before. In the Fourteenth District, Dunbar, who though of the minority, made an excellent record, and who carried his district, Santa Rosa, by over 200 majority, will be re-nominated easily, and there seems a very fair prospect of his being re-elected, as his personality counts for more than politics often in Assembly elections, and Dunbar is personally popular.

In the Twentieth District (Solano County) W. S. Killingsworth of Vacaville will be nominated again, unless he undertakes to make the contest for Senator from the Fifth District. He had a plurality of 596 two years ago. But on the other hand, King of Napa had a plurality of 1002, Republican, which would indicate that the chances of Killingsworth or any other Democrat going to the Senate from that district is slight. He will therefore be likely to prefer the certainty of a reelection to the Assembly to a probable defeat running for the Senate. I forgot to mention in its proper order that Dr. F. W. Gates of Oroville is likely to be the Republican and Dr. B. Caldwell the Democratic candidates for Assemblyman in the Seventh District, Butte County.

McNab has thrown down the gauntlet to Tarpey and the Hearstites in the selection which he caused Gould to make of twenty-five members at large of the Democratic State Central Committee. Tarpey's poor management is again shown in this matter. He allowed McNab to name the chairman and allowed the chairman to name twenty-five committeemen at large, with the result that McNab has the whole works and Tarpey and his owner are not in it for a moment. If there were a possibility of Hearst's nomination, it would be a very serious thing for him to have his campaign run by men avowedly hostile to him, like ex-Congressman Geary, Tim Spellacy, Isadore Dockweiler and John Ruddock, but as that eventuality is impossible, it of course makes no difference in the Presidential campaign but that fact does not lessen Tarpey's poor management. McNab has now complete control of the machine for two years, and the Horse and Carts will find it very difficult to make any impression on his fortifications at the August primaries.

Another evidence of Tarpey's poor management was the directing of Barney Murphy to call a meeting of the Committee next Saturday. Tarpey had furnished Gould with a list of 10 names that he wanted on the special committee of 25. Gould, who is very ambitious himself, was inclined to stand in with the Hearst outfit by placing some of Tarpey's names on the list. He was the more inclined to do so because Alford, his law partner, who made a Hearst speech at Santa Cruz, urged him to do so, and wanted to be one of the twenty-five, Alford being also anxious to hedge. When, however, Gould heard that Tarpey had ordered the Committee to meet next Saturday under the chairmanship of Barney Murphy, while according to all precedent he (Gould), as chairman of the convention, could have called the meeting, he was very angry, and after getting permission from McNab, at once announced the twenty-five names he was authorized to appoint at Santa Cruz, leaving out every one of Tarpey's nominees. That, of course, gives the chairmanship of the committee to McNab to name. He would like to have either Gould or Fitzgerald, but neither have the time, and it will probably go to W. J. McGee. McCabe, who has been the State Secretary for years, and who is to the California Democracy what Jake Stepperger is to their opponents, will also have to go, as he got on the Hearst band wagon, and now that there is no band, he is in the same fix as Camminetti, Alford and the others who thought Hearst's purse had no bottom.

Tarpey should have known better than to have angered Gould by calling the committee Saturday. Any one who knows Gould, and Tarpey knows him well, knows that he is supremely egotistical—his face shows that, and his manner confirms it—and to have so openly affronted him as the Hearst manager did, was the worst of politics. Tarpey is by far the worst that ever came over the political turnpike.

By the way, it may be interesting to know how the delegates to the Democratic National Convention now stand. Parker has 148 votes from New York, Indiana, Connecticut, Alabama, Tennessee and Georgia. Hearst has 101 votes, and there are 220 instructed. Then Olney has Massachusetts and Wall has Wisconsin; Gorman has Maryland and the District of Columbia, although they are nominally uninstructed; Bryan has Nebraska and Oklahoma, and Cockrell has Missouri. No one has two-thirds of the Convention, and Hearst and Bryan so far have not enough votes to stop the nomination of any one upon whom the balance of the convention may unite. There are, of course, a number of States yet to hear from, and there is no chance that any one will be nominated upon the first ballot.

It is admitted by the Eastern press, except the papers especially interested in his nomination, that the Parker boom is not very much stronger than the Hearst, and that while the Silent Judge has all the votes from New York, the Tammany delegates are going to do all they can to defeat him. They will urge that he cannot carry New York against Roosevelt, and that the fact that he is backed by Wall street, and that Belmont has offered to contribute $5,000,000, if he is nominated, to the campaign fund, will weaken him in the doubtful States of the West. Bryan will help Tammany in fighting Parker, and as he will be the Nebraska member of the Committee on Platform, he proposes to introduce a report endorsing the two platforms upon which he ran. That will give him a chance to make a speech attacking the goldbugs, and incidentally Parker. The speeches in the convention promise to be both warm and personal. It has not yet been definitely decided whether Hearst's name will be put before the convention or not, but Delmas has his speech all prepared to deliver if it is decided to nominate Hearst.

A SAILOR'S SONG.

By Clinton Scollard in Criterion

We kissed good-by in the gloaming
 Ere the moon crept up the sky;
 "When, love, will you be homing?"
 She cried, with a teary eye;
 "When will you cease from roaming
 The breast of the barren sea,
 And come to another breast for rest—
 To the longing heart o' me?"
 Then I said to her, low and slow,—
 "Oh, it's ever the lad must go,
 And it's ever the lass must stay,
 And that is the tale of the world-old woe
 Till the trump of the judgment day!"

Still I hear her voice entralling,
 And I see her standing there,
 With the night's deep shadows falling
 On the dawn-break of her hair.
 And ever her calling, calling,
 Floats over the barren sea,—
 "Come back to my aching breast with rest
 For the longing heart o' me!"
 But I cry to her, low and slow—
 "Oh, it's ever the lad must go,
 And it's ever the lass must stay,
 And that is the tale of the world-old woe
 Till the trump of the judgment-day!"

WHEN LOVE WAS DEAD.

By Nannie Byrd Turner in Smart Set

When love was dead, quite dead, and past all pain,
 Beyond all prayers and all reproaches said,
 I laid him where no other love had lain—
 When Love was dead.

In a dark chamber of my heart, so fain
 I was to let that heart be comforted,
 Remembering no longer; but in vain.

One night, I crept and touched his brow, instead,
 And suddenly my tears fell warm, like rain:
 I could have sworn Love sighed and stirred again.
 When Love was dead.

AWAKENING.

By Walter Pritchard Eaton in The Reader

A rose glow glims the western wall,
 The sweet night faints to dawn,
 And from the folds of outer dark
 Another day is born.

So I must rise and greet the world
 As it were still the same,
 As if my Love herself could rise
 And answer to her name.

And I must fret and smile and toil
 Where alien faces teem;
 Ere night will come again with stars
 And bring again my dream.

Former Mayor Van Wyck of New York lets it be known after sailing for Europe that he made $1,200,000 in Wall street "flyers." That is just as good a story as to say that he won it in a lottery, inherited it from a relation in New Zealand or found it in the pocket of an old vest.

The Christian Endeavor Association, it is reported, has endeavored to endorse the candidacy for the presidency of Hearst. This is a compliment, indeed. The ladies of the aforesaid society must be personally acquainted with the pseudo candidate and his habits.

BOOSTING SAN FRANCISCO.

The statement is made by that source and fountain-head of optimism, the California Promotion Committee, that San Francisco's population is now close to the 500,000 mark. The Promotion Committee is not given to looking at such things through the wrong end of its opera glasses, but in this case its figures may be accepted, we believe, as correct, or nearly so. A few years ago, an organization which called itself the "Half-Million Club," flourished for a little while and faded before it had really convinced anybody that San Francisco had a license to hope for such a figure of population within the time of the existing generation. Other associations of the same kind have lived, worked and died, each doing its little part toward boosting San Francisco up the scale of the cities. A very worthy successor to these organizations and one that seems destined to stay with us and help us in faith and in fact, is the Promotion Committee. It may slightly hasten, though it cannot in any wise alter the destiny of San Francisco. Nothing can bar the way between this youngest and most puissant of American communities and a greatness far greater than her longest-headed citizens have dreamed of; not even all the forces of labor unionism, or Schmitzism, or any other ism will suffice to turn aside the stream of prosperity that flows in through the Golden Gate.

Men who are still young have seen the city creeping, walking, running out over the sandhills and the waste acres of scrub oak and lupine. So rapidly and amazingly has this expansion been accompanied that the home-maker seeking the quiet of a nearby suburbanism has not been able to keep ahead of the flat-builder, the corner grocery and the asphaltum pavement. He has gone to bed a pioneer among the sand dunes, and has awakened to find himself swallowed up in a sea of neighbors.

Fortunately this peninsula has upon it room for a good many more of the half millions which will one day cluster about this foremost of the nation's gateways. It is a noble city now, but fancy what it will be when its streets roll unbroken from bay to ocean! Fancy what it will be when the line of its houses sweeps from the Presidio without a gap to the San Mateo line and beyond! Ours is a more generous foundation for metropolitan greatness than New York has had to build upon. The peninsula of San Francisco measures in breadth most pleasingly to us against the width of the narrow island of Manhattan. It looks out, too, across a mightier ocean upon old nations that are being born anew, upon lands thick with people to be fed and to be traded with, upon a theatre whose stage is set for another of the dramas of the Anglo-Saxon conquest. Half a million to-day! Who would have believed it twenty years ago? Who will believe now that twenty years hence it will be a million?

"THE WOMAN, SHE DID IT."

The Examiner, ghoul, grave-digger and slanderer of the dead and the living, takes especial pleasure in twisting the heart-strings of a woman because her lover, in a moment of insanity, over love or business reverse, destroyed his own life. In a house up-town a woman lies on a bed of pain, racked by remorse probably, probably undone because she really loved, probably because she feels that the man placed a burden on her shoulders he was too weak to bear himself. But that's another story. With the man's or the woman's motives we have no concern.

Our concern is with the Examiner and the other journals who have opened their thousand throats and let loose the saliva of slander from a million mouths. They have pointed the finger of scorn at this woman, well knowing her defenseless condition, and they have quoted Kipling's lines, "A rag, a bone and a hank of hair"; they have said that she had squeezed him dry of his genius, and then, when her horizon was enlarged, she dropped him like a useless rag.

It's a good story! Pile on the agony! "The woman, she did it!" Stir the hatred of woman to woman, stir the lack of chivalry in man, stir the coward to kick the woman because she is down!

It was not enough that an enormous pall descended on this woman through the crime of self-destruction committed by her affianced. It was not enough that the disgrace was piled upon her, fathoms deep, by no act of hers, but the baying hounds of indecent journalism must at her and tear her! Why? Because one of the craft had been hit! Because he chose to die by the act of his own hand! Because in the face of the law of God and common sense he killed himself! He selfishly placed himself beyond the pale of earthly suffering, and the indecent press and the unchivalrous public has taken from poor Joan Hadenfeldt, her ambition, her womanhood, her beauty, her genius, and her very helplessness, and mauled it, maimed it, slandered it, and jumbled it into an unrecognizable mass.

In an up-town room a poor, defenseless woman lies on a bed of pain, and from behind stone walls and paper battlements, great, big, able-bodied men shoot the arrows of sarcasm and slander.

Charity and chivalry dictate silence in regard to the woman. Charity and an obedience to the wishes of the dead dictate silence as regards the man. Be still, ye jackals of the press.

A CLEANER CHINATOWN.

The difference between a Secretary of the State Board of Health, who does nothing, and a secretary who does something, has been graphically illustrated by the last two secretaries of that somewhat ponderous organization which could be of such inestimable benefit to the State, but which, as a rule, confines its efforts to drawing the secretary's salary and the traveling expenses of its members.

For several years it was charged that there was bubonic plague in this town. There were those who said that it did exist and those who claimed that it did not, but one thing is certain, the story that it existed spread over the country and abroad, and did this State and city an enormous amount of harm. The State Board of Health, instead of getting energetically to work and cleaning Chinatown, which needed cleansing regardless of whether it harbored the plague or not, simply put a long list of the political hangers-on of the Governor on the pay roll of the State, and busied itself in denouncing all those who said anything about the presence of the disease as fakers, liars and persons of evil intent. But the denunciations fell on deaf ears when they reached Washington, and the Federal authorities continued to publish bulletins claiming that plague existed in San Francisco, while the Secretary and members of the Board of Health amused themselves with trips to medical conventions, where they were conspicuous by their silence; or to New York, to the Hawaiian Islands, or wherever their sweet will and the appropriation for the Board would carry them. No effort to clean Chinatown, to comply with the requirements of the Federal authorities, to establish sanitary conditions among the Chinese in this city were made, and the city and State continued to suffer and pay bills; while the Board of Health, its employees and officers traveled, drank their wine and spent the appropriation.

With a new Governor came a change. The personnel of the Board of Health, and especially its secretaryship, were changed, and the result has been a policy of activity instead of inactivity, less traveling, meetings and fun, and more work, business and results. Every cellar in Chinatown is being dug out; wooden floors are being replaced by cement, the Chinese are being forced to live above the level of the street, where light can reach their domiciles; rats, those breeders and carriers of disease, are being exterminated; tons of disinfectants are being spread everywhere; the cobble-stones over which a cat could not cross without hurting her feet, and which held the dirt and filth just where they were thrown, have been replaced by asphalt pavement, and in a word, it is possible even to pass through Chinatown to-day without soiling your clothes or contracting disease. The Federal authorities and the Health Officers of the National Board of Health have pronounced the plague a thing of the past; and San Francisco a clean and healthy city. All this is due to the Pardee Board of Health and its secretary, Dr. Fowler. The News Letter has frequently in the past criticised the Governor for some things he has done, and others that he has left undone, and it will no doubt have reason to do so again for both reasons; but we believe in giving credit where credit is due, and blame when and where they are deserved. We have urged the State Board of Health repeatedly to do exactly what it has now done, and we therefore congratulate it on its achievement and bid it keep up the good work.

A QUESTION ANSWERED.

"Is San Francisco a city of fine arts, classical literature and ethical culture?" This question is asked in a private letter from Boston, and the only surprising thing about the enquiry is that a Bostonian should have a sufficient stock of credulity to suggest to his mind the possibility of any town in the United States other than Boston having any knowledge of fine arts, classical literature, or ethical culture. Very true, quite a number of Bostonians, or who were denizens of that city of East winds years ago, are contented dwellers where the setting sun throws kisses through the Golden Gate, as it sinks away in the crimson horizon. None of these respectable people are Bostonians now, and hence they have not Boston's theory of the wild and barren Pacific Coast.

But to the question in point. Yes, San Francisco is a liberal patron of the fine arts, is fond of classical literature, which ethical culture is a daily pastime. It is amusing as well as amazing how ignorant some Eastern and foreign people are of the "sort of folk" that inhabit California, especially San Francisco. Now, the fact is, San Francisco is distinguished the civilized world over as a great money center, a mighty center of accumulation and distribution of merchantable commodities, a patron of the fine arts, so liberal that the private collections are the wonder of critics at home and abroad, and a student of classical literature, whose assiduous application is attested by the works of every standard author from the ancient Grecians to—Joaquin Miller. And in the matter of ethical culture, why, that, like the State flower—eschscholtzia—by the vulgar called the "Poppy" is cultivated by everybody.

San Francisco—and California—is on the borderland which separates all that one should reasonably expect in this world from the realities of the heights that passeth understanding, but the dividing line is like a fading rainbow when the colors merge the one into the other, almost as one. There is at least one conspicuous characteristic of San Francisco which always puzzles Boston, and that is that the people here do not run to "specialties." Fine art is one thing, classical literature is another thing. Commerce is one thing, erecting business and residence palaces is another thing. Ethical culture is the warp and woof in the pattern of every-day life which the people individually and collectively weave from a consistent mixture of fine arts, classical literature, commerce, palace building and chain-lightning business activity. The people out here prefer such a mixture to plain Emersonian transcendentalism, or lonely poetic genius, or Over Soul inspiration or the realities of pork and beans, yet all these items are included in the San Francisco mixture. San Francisco is situated on the Western confines of America, as Boston is situated on the Eastern confines. The towns are connected by many railways and telegraph lines and postal routes. Boston should take advantage of them to get acquainted with the people of the Golden Gate country.

FOOLS, FIRE-CRACKERS AND THE FOURTH

Sunday afternoon a boy was marching down Filbert street with a large fire-cracker sticking out of his pocket. A playmate, thinking it would be a good joke, set fire to the protruding fuse, and it was only because an alert passer-by, at the risk of injury to himself, grasped the smoking toy and flung it into the street, that the boy was saved a terrible laceration. The cracker exploded a second later with sufficient force, if properly confined, to have shattered a good-sized boulder, to say nothing of the child's thigh.

All the week, and for more than a week, fire-crackers, toy pistols and their deadly ilk, have been making certain streets of our city pandemonium, endangering life, limb and property, and making the lot of the sick and infirm miserable indeed—and it is not yet the Fourth of July. By force of custom we have learned to bear with all sorts of calamity on the Fourth, and out of a misdirected sense of patriotism to allow fools and gun-powder to work on that day their deadly silly sum of damage. But is there any reason why the police should allow this state of things to extend for a week or two previous to the Ever Glorious? But why not confine the license of Independence Day within its proper twenty-four hours?

What patriotism gains by making Liberty's birthday so hideous that only the poor, the sick and the deaf suffer themselves to remain in the city when it is celebrated, is a mystery. The wise citizen takes to the woods without answering and leaves the Fourth and its fire-crackers to those who like them.

They say that the Art Institute is in a prosperous condition. That may very well be, but in the meantime some of us would like to see the art. There is more talent here than anywhere else in the United States, more artistic talent, and it is thrown away. The youngsters, who are promising, go away because there is no field for them, and falling victims to the practice of hack-work in order to make a living, are lost to the Coast, and generally speaking, to art.

AN ILLITERATE MAYOR.

Criticism has been passed upon Mayor Schmitz because of his illiteracy, revealed in his recent message vetoing portions of the city budget. His English and his spelling are, indeed, amusing, if there can be anything funny about the ignorance of a man in high office, but when it comes to his arrogant and aggressive political depravity, sticking out all over this same paper, there is reason to be amazed. The preamble of this frank and forethought document is devoted to "knocking" the thirteen members of the Board of Supervisors who are neglecting their private interests while they try to keep Schmitz and his relatives from carrying away the city's treasury, vault, locks and all, and to punching holes in the doctrine of civil service. Schmitz has had much to say—or his mentor has had him say much—about the merit system and its beneficent effect upon municipal Government. Ever since he has had power to injure this system he has been punching holes in it with one hand and with the other writing denials of the fact and the intent. Now, at last, he shows himself as he really is, sneering at it and flouting it as vigorously as his limited knowledge of the language permits. Listen to him:

" * * * realizing the impossibility of progressive and advantageous operation of certain of the municipal departments, through the employment of laborers and others from the civil service lists, created before the incumbency of the present Mayor and composed of men in large measure hostile and disloyal to the present administration, in many instances incompetent and wanting in energy, in other instances unfit for the work to be done, the members who are responsible for the drafting of this budget have zealously labored to fasten upon every department involving responsibility to the Mayor of the city, the burden of doing work with employees not of their (his?) own selection, taken arbitrarily from lists of men, many of whom are absolutely unfit properly to do the work expected of them * * * "

If this be anything, it is a declaration that the Mayor's banner is the black flag of the spoils system, and lest there be mistake about his meaning, he goes on: "If the practice (of civil service reform) accorded with the theory, a beautiful Governmental fabric would be created, but when men taken from the civil service lists rejoice in their disloyalty of (to?) the administration of which they are a part, when they write letters to public officials, recommending applicants for employment upon the so.e ground that they are political enemies of the Mayor of the city, I think it high time to express a disapproval * * * "

In fine, Mayor Schmitz places above merit, above experience, above everything, "loyalty to the administration." We commend these declarations to the eminent citizens who framed the charter and secured its adoption, who have stood stubbornly by the civil service system, and have helped twice to put Schmitz in the Mayor's office. They constitute the challenge of a freebooter, trumpeting his defiance of decency in Government.

INJUNCTION AGAINST A LABOR UNION.

By a stroke of his pen, Judge Hunt has done more than has been done in many years, by the rest of the judiciary, to stop the illegal revolutionary actions of the union element in San Francisco.

Though the present enjoinder only operates during the pendency of the action recently brought against the Stablemen's Union Local, No. 8760, Supervisor T. F. Finn, E. Maza, T. J. White and John Killian by E. G. Price, proprietor of the Nevada Stables on Market street, it is most effective in bottling all efforts of the union to interfere in the slightest way with the conduct of Price's business. The hands of the union are bound in every direction.

The restraining order stipulates that the defendants to the action are to appeal before the court on Friday, July 1st, to show cause why the injunction should not be made permanent. In the meantime, the restraining order is in effect, and remains in effect until the cause is decided.

Indeed, the union leaders have had an idea that all the judiciary was tainted by the same virus that exudes from the inoculation sores of the police justices. It was high time this idea was knocked into a cocked hat, and knocked it has been. That blackmail scheme commonly known as "picketing" has received a set-back from which it will not readily recover. Judge Hunt has issued a writ that temporarily puts a stop to picketing or sandwiching of any kind.

It was decided some years ago that the presence of a red buggy with a driver attired in a blood-red suit before a citizen's door, the buggy bearing the sign "Collector of Bad Debts" in white letters on a red blanket on the horse, was a blackmail, and this means of coercion toward the poor debtor had to be abandoned by the conscienceless harpies who run collection agencies. Picketing and sandwiching is on a par with the method of collecting debts just described.

It is very unfortunate that there has not been enough backbone among those who have suffered at the hands of the labor leaders who constantly levy blackmail in one shape or the other to beat a few of the pickets into an unrecognizable mass with the soft end of a spiked club. If the injunction issued by Judge Hunt is not made perpetual at its next hearing, the next step should be the organization of a vigilance committee that will deal firmly with these law breakers and foreign agitators.

It is everywhere observable in Democratic circles that exactly in ratio to the approach of the St. Louis Convention, there is a shrinkage in the alleged Hearst boom. But that is not surprising. His candidacy was never seriously considered by any one—not even the managers. Many a man has been played for a sucker and enjoyed the hallucination, but only now and then has one been found who would consent to "go sniping," and be glad to "hold the bag," but our little man with the big barrel is one of that very few. The young man reminds one of the party that went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, only that he is still where the road-agents left him.

History of North America.

The first four volumes of "The History of North America," is being issued under the able and discriminating editorship of Dr. Guy Carleton Lee, of Johns Hopkins and Columbian Universities, and is being published by the firm of George Barrie & Sons, of Philadelphia. As far as the editorship is concerned, Dr. Lee's responsibility is a warranty that discriminating judgment, able labor and fastidious exactness will be assured throughout the work. In this department, moreover, Dr. Lee has shown the nicest care in the association with himself of a number of critical and advisory editors, including many of the most active workers in the domain of historical literature. Added to these are the names of expert advisers on special matters, such as colonial, military and naval affairs. The wide reach of knowledge and the judicious and critical treatment that should be a first condition in a work of such scope and importance as a history of North America on modern lines and dealing with the latest events of our day, are secured in an unusual and remarkable degree. The highest technique in printing and illustration is essential to the worthy production of a work like the present, something more than making a book is involved in the enterprise. To the priceless value of the text are added, therefore, the best results of the printer's craft in both the text and the illustrations. We have many able American historical works—works that are splendid monuments to their authors and are regarded as proud possessions by their owners. The worst that can be said of such is that they are only too limited in number, as indeed, they are too limited in the scope of their matter; they are what they are claimed to be: histories of a period more or less brief. It is therefore a fact of great significance—we might say, in fact, of unique importance—that the literature of our country, which has now become a world influence, is marking a new period by the publication of this monumental history, which is of more than literary importance, it is of national interest. The twenty volumes to be printed will cover the whole history of the United States, and the other members of the North American continent, north and south, and not merely the recorded history of this section as told in the story of the groping voyages of the Norsemen, in the hardly less dim searchings of the early explorers, and in the accounts of the successive stages of the development of the continent and the phases of national growth, but its story as interpreted by modern science. To this story comprehensively told in complete narrative, with all the lights and shades of the picture in due proportion and in just perspective, is added the latest feature of American history; viz., the insular possessions of the United States, thus rounding out the great undertaking and giving the work its logical amplification and conclusion and placing the reader in possession of an erudite and skillfully wrought out record of the story of the section and the nation.

Gideon Wurdy has made

A Foolish Dictionary. a rather original and interesting little book by preparing a series of humorous definitions of some five hundred words. He says very modestly in his preface that he will be satisfied if he should produce one laugh from the readers of the dictionary. He has succeeded much better than that, and a good deal of wholesome fun can be extracted from a glance at its pages. It is well suited to this hot weather, for it is by no means hard to read. It is not altogether original, for, as the author, who is as honest as he is modest, says: "Some slight deference has been made to other wits, and the definitions include a few quotations from the great minds of the past and present." A few unaccountable and absolutely unpardonable mistakes have been made. Thus we find "ante-imperialist for anti-imperialist, though the definition of this article as a patriot whose conscience works overtime," goes far to condone the offense. Appendicitis is defined as a modern pain costing about $200 more than the old-fashioned stomach-ache." Some of the definitions are too far-fetched for endurance, as is to be expected in a work of this sort. Thus, when "automobile" is set out as "From English ought to, and Latin moved, to move. A vehicle which ought to move, but frequently can't." Perhaps one of the best definitions is the following: "Family—Originally a wife and several children, a matter of pride to the possessor. Now obsolete among the careful, or confined to the wife, a bull-pup and a canary-bird."

Published by the Robinson, Luce Company, Boston.

Messrs. Paul Elder & Company announce for fall publication, in a special, limited edition, "Upland Pastures," a series of out-of-door essays by Adeline Knapp. These essays, so far as they are localized, deal with the beautiful things of spring and summer in California. They are permeated, however, with a philosophy which is universal; their readings are from the broad page which nature spreads open for us everywhere, that those who will may learn its message of beauty and of rejoicing. The essayist says: "All things of nature are for man's use and joy; but perhaps they serve their highest use when he returns God thanks for their beauty." The edition is to be limited to 1200 copies.

"The Nation's Responsibility for its Laborers on the Panama Canal" is a very important treatise of a great undertaking which is now attracting the attention of all the world. Dr. C. A. Stephens, the author, compiled the book from personal observations during a recent visit to the Isthmus in the interests of the Youth's Companion.

The Political Situation

The News Letter is not given to much self-laudation, yet it may not be improper for me to remark that the first announcement of the probable appointment of Congressman Metcalf to a place in the Cabinet was made in these columns, as the dates of the papers will show. The Western press, with the exception of the News' Letter, knew nothing of the prospects before Mr. Metcalf until their correspondents wired the news from Washington. The fact is that the appointment was offered the Congressman before he left Washington to come to this Coast, and he had accepted it. The only change in the original programme has been the death of Senator Quay, followed by the selection of Attorney-General Knox by the powers that be in Pennsylvania, as the dead Senator's successor. That left two vacancies in the Cabinet, and required more re-arranging. Moody, who is a lawyer, would much prefer Knox's place to the one he has at the head of the navy, and that fact created the possibility that Metcalf might succeed Moody instead of Cortelyou. Of course, he would greatly prefer the place, and with the immense interests this State and Coast has in naval matters, a Cabinet officer from this Coast could have no more congenial place than Secretary of the Navy. It is possible that that arrangement may yet be made, though at this writing it does not seem likely, at least for the present. After the election, if Roosevelt continues as President, as even the Democrats say he will, the entire Cabinet will be re-arranged. Wilson will stay at the head of Agriculture, and Hays, if he will consent to the Portfolio of Foreign Affairs; but Hitchcock will probably retire from the Interior. Taft will remain where he is, and will probably be the party's candidate in 1908; but Payne goes out as Postmaster General, and Cortelyou gets his place; and in the re-arrangement, Metcalf may find himself much better placed than as Secretary of Commerce.

To fill Metcalf's place in Congress, the candidates are already as plentiful as blackberries along a Southern road. There are, for instance, the three States Senators from Alameda, Knowland, Lukens and Leavett, although Leavett is not in it to hurt. Then there are ex-Mayor Davis, who is the programme candidate, and Thomas Rickard, the latter of Berkeley; and Frank Devlin of Solano, and Lieutenant-Governor Anderson, also of the same county. Superintendent Leach of the Mint says he does not want the nomination, and Anderson is reported to have made the same statement, which is probably true, as he wants the place now filled by the Honorable George C. Pardee, and which Mr. Anderson is now filling pro tem. Lukens is backed by the Pardee influence, he having always been the Governor's representative in the State Senate. Knowland is said to have the support of Metcalf. Leavett just wants the place, and apparently has no support but his own; and Rickards is making his own fight on the assumption—a violent one, I admit, in Alameda County—that any American citizen has a right to aspire to any place he chooses in the gift of the people, regardless of what the "push" wants.

To understand the political situation in Alameda it must first be clearly understood that all the male population want office, and secondly that they all want the place held by Senator Perkins, and he wants to hold on to that. Starting out with that premise, we have Pardee, Senatorial candidate to succeed Perkins; Metcalf ditto; and Lukens and Knowland willing to help them each along. Perkins himself is naturally saying nothing except offering his congratulations to Metcalf, and watching the fight. The warmer it gets the better for the distinguished statesman, and his principal occupation now is to encourage all sides and pit one against the other.

It will be noticed in all this hubbub the other two counties in the district, Contra Costa and Solano, are supposed to have nothing to say only to endorse what Alameda decides to do. Senator Belshaw has concluded to keep out of the fight and to urge his claims for the Senate, although Martinelli of San Rafael thinks he can defeat him for the latter place, and Senator Perkins is credited by George Hatton with saying that Belshaw should be elected to stay at home.

In Solano, as I have said, Frank Devlin, who wanted to go to the State Senate and was supposed to have Metcalf's backing for the place, and Lieutenant-Governor Anderson, have been mentioned for the place. Devlin was District Attorney of his county, is young and bright, and would make in many respects the best Congressman of all those mentioned, but he does not live on the right side of the river. Anderson wants to be Governor, and when he gets through playing Governor for the next six weeks, until Pardee returns, he will want the place all the more. But there are others who want to be Governor besides Anderson, on this side of the Tehachapi, and beyond question there are a dozen or two of candidates south of that barrier. On this side of the mountains Charley Curry, at present Secretary of State, would like to be Governor, and there are lots of people who would like to see him change his offices at the State Capitol. Curry would have lots of support from this city, and he would be the first Governor for years who knew anything about the public business of the State before he was inaugurated. The result is that he would make a very strong candidate, and Anderson would have a time winning out against him. But nevertheless, Anderson prefers the prospect of being Governor in the future to the likelihood of being Congressman to-day. He has told several of his friends that his business arrangements would not allow him to run for Congress, even if he could get the nomination without any effort, and that he thinks it would be very difficult to get the nomination away from Alameda.

It will be seen from all this that the Congressional fight which results from Metcalf's promotion includes the Governorship, the Senatorship and a number of lesser places, besides the one which is nominally involved. The whole State is therefore interested in the battle, and so many interests are mixed up that it is not easy to say which will prevail. Lukens and Knowland are both personally clever fellows, though no great luminaries, but then we have not sent any great luminaries from this State to Congress for a long time, and we must not seek to astonish our Eastern friends so suddenly. Lukens is the best lawyer, has the more money, and while he is too stout to be active, would no doubt do very well with Metcalf's help, and besides, he can entertain, which even for a Congressman would be a good thing. Knowland is young, has a boyish face, and would be a better department man in Washington than Lukens, and after all, it is the department work that counts. The fact is, honors are easy between the Alameda candidates, and it will not make much difference to the State at large which one is elected, if he must come from that county, and presumably there is no help for it.

If there were any chance of Solano getting her candidate, Devlin, coming from Vallejo and the Navy Yard would be an excellent man for the place. He is as good a lawyer as Lukens, and as young as Knowland, and for the matter of that, better looking than either of the Alameda men. He is active, and both on the floor and in the departments would be the best man in the race for the place. But in politics the best man rarely wins.

As I predicted last week, McNab won out with ease at the Democratic State Committee meeting last Saturday, and he is now in control of the whole works. He is the boss of the Democratic party in California. Tarpey showed what a poor manager he is. He first had Murphy, who has been as putty in his hands, and the Man With the Big Hat was challenged at once on his right to call the meeting and to preside now that it was called. Gould, however, knowing that McNab had the votes to win, graciously allowed Murphy to proceed, and then as politely knocked him out of the Chairmanship, and poor Al. McCabe out of the Secretaryship. I hope, however, that he has made a good thing out of the three months' work he has put in running the Hearst headquarters at the Grand, although I see by the papers that a man who had a similar job in Wisconsin has had to sue the Presidential candidate for his salary, and has garnisheed the collections from the sale of his papers in Milwaukee, so Al. must be careful.

The Ocean Treasure Myths.

Bay of Vigo. An Italian will try it this time, and in view of the innumerable failures of his predecessors, the most novel and modern contrivances will be employed for exploring the bottom of the bay in order to locate the treasure and bring it to the surface when it is found. The way the treasure came to be deposited in this peculiar spot, a treasure the value of which is estimated by each succeeding searcher at enormous figures, is as follows: On October 12, 1702, a number of Spanish galleons laden with bars of silver and plate from the West Indies, arrived in Vigo Bay, convoyed by a French fleet. Here they were attacked by the combined English and Dutch fleets, under Sir George Rooke, who captured several of the galleons with their valuable cargoes. Seeing that defeat was inevitable, the Spanish Admiral scuttled many of the galleons to prevent the treasure falling into the hands of the enemy, and it is the cargo of the sunken vessels which it is now proposed to recover. Many thousands of pounds have already been expended in this quest, and not only at Vigo, but in other parts of the North Atlantic where the Spanish galleons, laden with spoils of war and the booty of buccaneers, who did not hesitate to rifle the most fanes, where the altar furniture was of the most costly character. Baltimore has a galleon of its own piled away in some unknown quarter, the basis of many a money losing enterprise up to date. Within the past five years, New York was represented by another expedition which sailed from Hellgate to find one of the lost galleons which are as fertile in romance for a community on the seaboard as the vanishing mines, such as the Pegleg, Gunshot and a score of others are to the inhabitants of the Western mining regions.

Protection for Fools and their Money.

"Gold Bricks of Speculation" ought to be the by-word of the speculator who can be properly classified as a tenderfoot in the business, one who is not posted on the methods adopted by the Sir Mulberry Hawkes of the promoting profession. It is the work of a prominent member of the Chicago Board of Trade, John Hill, Jr., by name. Mr. Hill has put everything in black and white, so that those who run can read, and it is put so clearly and distinctly that the simplest minded individual can have no excuse in the future for allowing himself or herself to be robbed. The game is before them, the modus operandi and the way it is bound to work out when the trap has been closed on the unskilled, the credulous and the unwary. Forewarned is to be forearmed, they say, and these chapters on gold bricks must certainly, when perused, put one fully on guard. The gamut of sure-thing speculation is run its entire length from bucket shop, the get-rich-quick and "investment swindles," "pools," "syndicates," "combinations," "mutuals," and "turf swindling" of all kinds. A section of the volume is devoted to the "tools of swindlers," such as "fake," "trade journals," the "booklet," "fake" mercantile agencies, and other references; "fake" banks and how references, financial reports are sold, and the "convenient" stock exchange. Samples of touting letters are given which will remind dealers of many they have received themselves, and in some instances have cost them money. The difficulty of getting at these sneaking thieves is commented upon, and the inadequacy of the punishment is provided for cases of the kind. The author is to be commended upon his work, which should do much in itself to protect people who have to be protected against themselves, as ready victims of every brazen scandal they come up against.

Scramble for Stock.

The disposition of the public in this city is clearly shown in connection with the recent upheaval in the Tonopah shares. When these mines were first discovered, the locaters came down to this city and tried to interest local capital. Like every one else who ever tried to get a San Francisco capitalist to back up a legitimate mining proposition, they soon left in disgust. Eastern people were appealed to in turn, and promptly saw an opportunity which they turned to good advantage. Having secured the mines and opened up their wealth of ore, they came back to San Francisco with shares of stock, and met a ready sale not only for shares in the properties of repute, but for all else which they may offer, good, bad and indifferent. There are millions of these shares, and the gambling instinct of the local investors can be fully satisfied by every corporation in line, without the necessity of losing a share needed to insure control by the original holders. It will be the same thing with the boards of directors. Once a director always a director, for no human skill nor ingenuity can ever succeed in acquiring the quorum necessary to effect a change in the personnel. Lacking the nerve to take the material, the dollar chasers of this city are now rushing around wild-eyed to grasp the immaterial. The old scenes of the rush for wild-cat oil shares are being repeated in the Tonopah, and then for the aftermath.

A Dull Spell in Local Stocks.

A prominent broker who has been connected with the Stock and Bond Exchange since the day of its foundation, told the writer the other day that business was quieter with the brokers now than ever before in its history. He could assign no reason for the peculiar state of affairs, and allowance was made for the season of the year, in his remark. There is plenty of money in town. No one will question that fact, and why people will keep their hoardings locked up in the bank at a low rate of interest which the bankers earn, and his profits besides, by placing surplus funds in the very channels which the depositor overlooks, is something which these queer individuals can best answer for themselves. It's all the stranger, too, the more one ponders over the proposition. Still, from all appearances the public has given local securities the cold shake for months past, and the banks have pretty well filled up in the lines they patronize. Yet the brokers who deal in Wall street securities do not complain of hard times. On the contrary, they claim to be coining money, all of which would argue that San Francisco investors have dropped local stocks for those of New York and the East. It is the old story, possibly beading upon home goods, of a prophet without honor in his own country. There is so much talk nowadays about patronizing home industry that it seems strange some of the seed sown so liberally by the apostles of this cult does not bear some fruit.

Dull Times on Pine Street.

The market on Pine street has been more dead than alive for weeks past. The dullness is accredited in certain quarters to the season of the year, the argument being that no one ever yet saw a Comstock mark in mid-summer. This seems a very stupid argument, especially if a market is supposed to be predicated upon ore discoveries. This is tantamount to asserting that the discovery of an ore body is limited to certain seasons of the year. Judging from the way things are going now on the street, ore does not count much as a factor in the business. Ophir, for instance, with the finest prospect shown up on the lode for years, shows a lack of backbone instead of holding firm and buoyant, with prices looking upward instead of taking the back trail on the slightest excuse. Great hopes are expressed for a revival of business in the near future. This can be expected when the miners rule the market with power enough to lift it out of the hands of a bear clique, which seems at present to be able to offset effects even of ore production. There is something rotten in Denmark when such an anomalous condition of affairs can prevail.

The annual report of the Department of the Interior of the Dominion of Canada for 1903 gives the following concerning the production of gold in the Yukon territory: The gold production for the year ended June 30, 1903, amounted to $12,113,015.34, as compared with $9,566,340.52 in the previous year. The value of gold produced there last year was greater than in any other year, the next best having been in 1899-1900, when the production amounted to $9,809,464.64.

The vagaries of suicides form a dismal subject of comment, but those of our local aspirants for another world show the most pronouncedly queer ways of getting there. Take the case of the San Jose girl, for example, who has vainly tried to commit suicide three times in three weeks, and sought a church as the place finally where she could most easily carry out her purposes. She was frustrated again by a frightened druggist, who rushed into the church and took the arsenic which she had procured from him, out of her coat sleeve. One of two things is obvious, either the girl is a pretender who does not intend to commit suicide at all, and should be arrested for a breach of the peace, since she chooses to cause such trouble, or she is insane, in which case she ought to be provided with such accommodation as is suitable for insane persons. It is a disgrace to any city to have a person at large who has attempted suicide three times in three weeks.

The fact that times have been exceptionally good accounts for the infrequency of occurrences like the following: Alexander Finn, a discharged soldier, made an attack upon a certain Mrs. Whitney in Oakland and stole her purse. Finn was found to be without money, with the exception of two copper cents, and was unquestionably hungry at the time when he committed the crime. He must be a fairly steady man, for he had evidence upon his person tending to show that he had been a roundsman in the Federal Police at Manila. That the majority of the "returned empties" from the Philippines have been able to find work as soon after landing here speaks volumes for the prosperity we have enjoyed. Let the backset in trade come, and crimes like this will be as plentiful as blackberries, and we shall see some of the fruits of imperial expansion in an unduly swollen list of crimes of violence.

The qualifications for the successful Rhodes scholar are manifold. They are literary and scholastic attainments, success in sports, qualities of manhood, in relation to truth, courage, devotion to duty, and moral force. The scholarship is worth fifteen hundred dollars a year, and seven Californians are eligible. One cannot help smiling at the innocence of the English committee which drew up such a broad and elastic set of requirements. Fancy treating a California politician with an appointment the strings on which were so loose as these are. They say, moreover, that the President of the University who has the privilege of making the selection, could give cards and spades to most politicians round the bay. There is going to be a pretty good chance for "pull" in this matter.

Let the Prohibitionists read of the efforts of the convicts at San Quentin to obtain the drug which is infinitely more harmful than liquor, and understand the impossibility of destroying the human craving for stimulants and narcotics. The sale of opium goes on admittedly, for the authorities confess their helplessness to destroy it entirely. In addition, the convicts have managed to plant the Mexican drug called "marijuana," which is even more dangerous and deadly than opium, and to smoke it after they have harvested it. Why should such things take place at San Quentin? There is no other jail in the civilized world where the convicts have the opportunity of gratifying their evil propensities as they have there.

Judge Dunne has grown tired of Chinese cases, and wants no more of them brought to him, because of the amount of perjury involved in them. This is a curious reason for not wishing to do one's duty. It would seem that the Judge's course should be obvious, and that he should get rid of perjury by punishing the perjurer. To throw down the bat and declare you won't play because the pitching is twisty is not "good ball." But how comes it that a judge who is accustomed to perjury in white cases should only shy when the Chinese are in question? Can the fact that the Chinese have no vote, have anything to do with the question? I should sincerely hope not, but the matter has a nasty look, and would seem to involve either laziness or fear on the part of his Honor.

A local Japanese says rather significantly that his countrymen have more reason to be afraid of the white peril than we have of the yellow. There is something to be said for this argument, and it must be admitted that his wily countrymen are taking every precaution. They seem to know us so much better than we know ourselves. We have not had, for instance, any contracts for the supplying of beef to the Japanese forces. Here is another example of that marvelous Japanese sagacity concerning which everybody is so eloquent just now. A photograph of General Shafter, however, which is widely circulated by an American supply firm, is expected to do much toward turning the attention of the Japanese to our commissariat department.

It is a pity to see a worthy fiddler so degraded as the Mayor has degraded himself by his recent message. The thing is so pretentious as to be really ludicrous. We do not expect good English from the leader of orchestras, but we do expect an intelligible document from the hands of a City Executive who undertakes to turn out eight thousand words of criticism and advice. There is one good thing about the matter. Nothing so reveals the personality of a man as his written word, and judged by this document, Mayor Schmitz is a somewhat commonplace person, with a very vulgar style of writing, which only tends to increase the natural vulgarity of his ideas.

Judge Gilbert, of the United States Federal Bench, has wisely decided to go to Portland before he hands down a decision in the Oakland water rate case. Whichever way he may decide, he will be better out of reach for a little while, as there is nothing which stirs up the pious Oaklander like that water question. They are always being sold out, to hear them talk. Every decision so far has been denounced not only from the editor's chair but even from the pulpit, and Judge Gilbert will be a very exceptional person if he is able to satisfy them. Anyway, he has gone to Portland, and I should recommend him to lose the papers in some of the waste places of Oregon.

There is one way by which a wife can get support even more effectively than by means of the divorce court. Let her go and live with her mother. Mrs. Daywalt, wife of a contract army surgeon at Manila, did this. The doctor did not pay for the maintenance of the wife, and her mother did, until she grew tired, when she sued the doctor for the money expended, got judgment and attached some of his land. Here it is appropriate to score one for mother-in-law.

TWO UNUSUAL POEMS.

Two poems on the death of little children—one expressing the feelings of the father, and the other those of a childless friend—have recently taken a deep hold upon the hearts of many men and women in all parts of the country. The first, by Edmund Vance Cooke, appeared in "The Booklovers' Magazine." The other is not a new poem, but has recently gained a wider audience by having been signalized as James Whitcomb Riley's favorite—a judgment which further endears the poet to his old admirers.—Current Literature.

THE LITTLE LONELY LIFE OF HIM.

Edmund Vance Cooke.

The little lonely life of him! He dwelt
Cored in our hearts, yet only partly felt
The love which folded him. How could we pour
The rapturous lore
Of love with which we bubbled to the brim,
So it might also flood the heart of him?
Our syllables and their strange ways
Came in half-foreign phrase
To little, unaccustomed ears, while his wee words
Fluttered like baby birds,
Untaught of flight.
Could he know, quite,
The meaning of the cuddling care? And did we reach
Without the definite harmonies of speech
The surest, sweetest tone
To chord his little being with our own?

The little lonely death of him! True, at the best
All men must sup alone with the last guest.
The sweet and sun-lit living room
Is ever built beside the quiet tomb.
Between them is a passage, not so wide
That ever two may tread it side by side.
Hard, hard! yet, groping down the narrow hall,
The journeying one may hear our saddened call,
Our cheering, sympathizing cries,
Or the shared sorrow of the last good-bys.
But he, the little, wee one, could he know
Our hearts were cloven with the woe?
The love which gilds the dark distress,
The blossom in the wilderness,
The one sweet in the bitterness,
The human murmur of the moan,
The music in the dirge men call a groan,
He could not know. Alone! alone!

And is he lonely still? The dazed mind gropes
Amid a labyrinth of doubts and hopes.
Life is for living. Should the lamp be torched
To break it ere the wick be scarcely scorched?
Lonely? Ah, only half I hope that he is not,
Fearing that we who loved and love him are forgot.
Selfish, I own, but love's delicious wine
Breathes ever forth the sweet bouquet of "Mine!"
Lonely? How were he else? Does not the baby flower
Droop in its tender hour,
Transplanted? Thrives it in the stranger-earth
As in the native soil which gave it birth?
Lonely? But in the sea of loneliness,
The great sea where the tide of death's distress
Rises and ebbs and rises till the press
Floods our own nostrils with its bitterness—
In that sea is a Beacon, and its flame
Kindles the heart of man to-day the same
As in the uncounted centuries which are fled—
Faith of reunion with the loved and dead.

BEREAVED.

James Whitcomb Riley's Favorite Poem.

Let me come in where you sit weeping—aye,
Let me, who have not any child to die,
Weep with you for the little one whose love
I have known nothing of.
The little arms that slowly, slowly loosed
Their pressure round your neck—the hands you used
To kiss—such arms—such hands I never knew.
May I not weep with you?

Fain would I be of service—say something
Between the tears, that would be comforting,
But oh!—so sadder than yourself am I,
Who have no child to die!

The Continental Building and Loan Association has issued an invitation to all who have helped to make the Association what it is, the largest co-operative bank in the world, to meet the employees of the institution at a dinner at the St. Francis Hotel on Monday, the 4th of July. The day is fitting, and the ceremony is heralded to the invited on a beautiful, engraved cardboard. This is ornamented by a steel engraving, and it is one of the most ornate of the invitations issued this year. It is signed by William Corbin. We bespeak a large attendance, and here's good luck and continued prosperity to the efficient management and the corporation.

SOCIETY

Dear Bessie: There was a time, so Aunt Susie tells me, that but one or two places of summer resort had the power to attract the beau monde of San Francisco, or where they saw fit to assemble. Now there are so many of them, and scattered so widely all over the State, that none of them are unduly crowded, and no matter where one goes, one is sure to meet some of their acquaintances. This year most everybody who intended spending the entire season out of town got away early this month, and so it has been what Jennie calls "deadly dull" in town; that is, there has been little of moment taking place, and only small, informal affairs have been attempted. As, for instance, Helen Wagner's cosy little tea last Friday; the tea which Mrs. Eleanor Martin gave on Sunday as a welcome home to Mrs. Loughborough, and "Jo." Julia Buckbee had the card club meet at her house last week, and another card hostess of last week was Miss Phelan at her home on Valencia street, where she gave a bridge party for Marie Voorhies and Laura McKinstry. Then Francis Howard had a luncheon and theatre party on Saturday—the St. Francis and the Columbia the respective locales; but the pleasantest of all was the tea Mrs. Patten gave at Alcatraz for her mother, Mrs. Anderson, the McDowell taking her guests there and home again. The artillery officers at the Presidio give a hop next Tuesday night.

But what of the weddings? I think I hear you ask. Yes, there were an unusual number of them named to come off this summer, and they have been spread over the three months of June, July and August, so as to give each of them a share. Among the July weddings are to be those of Anna Sperry, Florence Bailey, Edith Shorb and Miss O'Sullivan, while in August the happy couples will include Grace Martin and William Horne; Edith Findley and George Gardiner; Stella McCalla and William Chapin; Charlotte Russell and Clement Tobin, Miss Patten and Dr. Eastman, of the army.

It is so seldom that the Ritualistic little church of St. Mary's the Virgin is the locale of a wedding, I must tell you of a very pretty one I attended there last week. Miss Margaret Bell Smith was the bride and Edwin J. Thomas of Alameda the groom, and the Rev. Mardon Wilson the officiating clergyman. The church was very effectively dressed with marguerites and sweet peas, and the wedding party consisted of Irene Thomas as maid of honor, with four attendant bridesmaids and four ushers, and after the church ceremony there was a reception at the home of the bride's father, Mr. Clarence Smith, on Vallejo street.

Fanny writes home from St. Louis that she ran across the Bents in one of the exhibition buildings, and that Ethel was looking well and seemed quite infatuated with Captain Bent's new station, which is somewhere near Little Rock, where she says the people are very hospitably inclined. Louise Breeze is back again from her visit to her sister, Mrs. Benson, who returned with her and will spend some time in San Francisco, it being her first visit here in years; Ethel Lincoln came back with them, and all three enjoyed the big show at St. Louis while absent. Ethel Keeney Tomlinson will be here next month, and will, I hear, stay several weeks this time. Tom comes, too, so perhaps that is the reason why. We are also to have quite a prolonged visit from the Fitzallan Longs this year. Mrs. Long arrived on Wednesday, the General to follow, and they are to remain with the Reques at Piedmont until the autumn; and another what you might call an absentee is coming on an official visit—I mean Captain Sydney Cloman, who used to be such a favorite here years ago. He is a member of the general staff and comes now on special duty.

You ought to see how improved the old Crocker grounds are since the unsightly fence was pulled down; they will be in fine order by the time the Will Crockers get home, for we are to have them back from Europe before many moons, so there will soon be one less closed up house on Nob Hill.

But who do you think got back this week? Dear old Mrs. Selby, who has been away for several years, and every one is so glad to see her once more. Apropos of absentees in Europe, I hear Lily Spreckels is going with her mother to take in the sights of Paris and all its delights, and will then, I believe, do Rome, and we are not to see them back for some months. The Will Tevises have gone on a passear to Europe, and will be away until the late autumn; Mrs. Will is going to try what Carlsbad will do for her. The W. J. Irwins returned from their trip East just in time to sail for Honolulu last week, where they will spend the rest of the summer. You know they have two lovely homes in the Hawaiian Islands, one in Honolulu and the other on one of the other islands, and as they usually do a good deal of entertaining during their visits their coming is always quite an event in the sleepy erstwhile kingdom.

The George Newhalls have gone to Burlingame for July and August, and I hear their newly done-up home on Pacific Avenue will be something worth seeing by the time it is ready to receive them within its doors; the W. F. Herrins are at Shasta Springs, but will be back in town by the first of July; Della Mills has returned from her visit to Portland; the H. C. Breedons are at Del Monte at present, going later to San Rafael. The Sam Wilsons are back from Mill Valley, where they have been since the early spring; Bessie Younger McDonald is camping at Blythedale, and will not go East for the present. Jessie Wright is visiting Beth and Ruth Allen at Menlo Park; Laura Prather has gone to see the Fair at St. Louis. Ruth Kirkpatrick will spend July at Tahoe; the Henry Duttons and Sam Buckbees made a week's end trip with their autos to Byron Springs last Saturday.

Address, Thomas L. Bell, Felton, P. O.

Mrs. A. J. Moulder has been making a change from Pacific Avenue to Clay and Gough streets, and when she moves, the J. H. Covodes are to be a part of her household, I hear.

There is always some change going on at the Presidio, and the Tenth Infantry is the latest to make a move. They have wanted to go, I believe, almost ever since they have been here, but 'tis said that now the orders have actually come which sends them to Fort Lawton and Fort Wright in Washington, they are sorry to leave San Francisco. Part of the regiment goes next week—the rest not until October, when the Presidio is to be enriched by the arrival of the Fourth Cavalry, at least a part of it, as some of it goes to Monterey. The Tenth has been very hospitable and given many pleasant little parties while at the Presidio, and we shall be sorry to say adieu. The army ladies' card club held their last meeting at Mrs. Girrard's, who has a charming home in Alameda; the Greenleaves still remain constant to their first love, Berkeley, and have induced many of their service friends to follow in their footsteps.

The A. A. Moores of Oakland are off to Europe tomorrow, I believe, and are to spend the summer automobiling through the British Isles. Can you imagine anything more delightful? —Elsie.

The Ushers Club gave their initial entertainment and dance at Scottish Hall on Sunday, June 19th. The programme opened up with several interesting vaudeville numbers. Mr. Arthur Melvin, coon-shouter, gave the "Gondolier," and several encores. G. G. McLaughlin rendered "Old Heidelberg," with a pleasing tenor. Mr. Jack McKrie showed how "A Hot Old Time" could be played in six ways—first in rag-time, then in a church, then in concert, then as a waltz. Raymond Cedarbloom, assisted by Katie Kelly, made a hit singing "Sadie Malone," and Mr. Robert E. C. Masterson gave some clever imitations of Henry Miller in the third act, Covent Garden scene, from "Heartsease"; Mrs. Patrick Campbell in "The Joy of Living"; Nance O'Neill as Lady Macbeth; Edward J. Morgan as David Rossi in "The Eternal City"; Florence Roberts as Sappho, and Mlle. Anna Held. Particular mention must be made of Mr. Masterson's imitations of Mrs. Pat. Campbell and Henry Miller; in both he displayed much emotion and dramatic power, and imitated the voice and gestures of each artist excellently.

Major F. L. Payson, of the U. S. A., has been granted leave of absence for one year, on account of ill-health. He left on Wednesday with his wife and family for Paris. He has been stopping for some time at the Colonial. This hostelry seems to have captured the army and navy. There are those who scoff at gustatory pleasure but they are the crabbed, the pessimistic and the insincere. It is a rather remarkable fact that there are but few lovers of good things to eat in this world, that are not possessed of remarkable intellects. The greatest minds the world has ever known would have expressed pleasure in partaking of a meal if prepared at Moraghans at the California Market. It is the Mecca of the epicure.

THE LOOKER-ON

In one of the daily papers a writer on sporting events laments the decrease of popular interest in the prize-ring and its stall-fed practitioners. His cry of regret finds its proximate cause in the failure of the Jeffries-Munroe fake, and at some length he points out that prize-fighters are falling in public estimation, and that the "noble art of self-defense" is rapidly losing caste. Although he does not say so, this commentator doubtless believes that "you cannot fool all of the people all of the time." The people of this city have been fooled so often by the prize-ring grafters that the band of confidence operators had about reached the conclusion that the crop of those innocents who are born every day was larger here than elsewhere, and that "any old thing would go" in San Francisco. The main reason for the postponement of the Jeffries-Munroe fight, the wise ones say, was to affect a betting. With Jeffries a prohibitive favorite at 10 to 3, the manipulators saw but little chance to make money. Something had to be done. The champion's legs, therefore, became shaky. Now, the miner from Butte says Jeffries is afraid of him. Before the date in August for which the fight is now set, the odds will shorten considerably, if the San Francisco betting public is as foolish as usual. The grafters will be thereby given another opportunity to fleece the innocent, and the "noble art" will be elevated accordingly. Such manipulations have marked nearly all the championship contests held in San Francisco, but the people are slowly awakening to the fact that ringing the changes in this manner are all part of the game. Of late, many of the clubs have been losing money because the gudgeons will no longer bite. The betting on the Jeffries-Munroe fight was very light, because most ring followers figured that the miner was hopelessly out-classed. If that impression could be changed, of course the odds should change with it. The way to work a change in the public mind was found by a postponement at the demand of Jeffries. A looker-on can now lie back and watch the playing of the game.

Truly Shattuck, who has won fortune on the vaudeville stage, is again in San Francisco and appeared at the Orpheum. It will be remembered that she was made famous in a night by the death of a young man to whom, it was said, she was engaged. Her mother objected to the young man, and his death resulted. Truly was then a Tivoli chorus girl, but she bounded into vaudeville while the manner of the death of her admirer was yet the talk of the town. She has been bounding along ever since, and now she is rich, has an established place on the stage, and is even more beautiful than in the old Tivoli days. The public has an insatiable curiosity for a woman "with a past," and they are ever ready to pay their big American dollars to see an actress who has achieved a notorious divorce, or for love of whom some foolish young man has lost his life.

A party of prominent Englishmen, many of whom have been municipal officials, are coming to San Francisco to make a close study of the operations of our charter, the fame of which, it seems, has gone abroad. They should attend a meeting of the Board of Supervisors, when the Mayor and the representatives of the untterrified Democracy are exchanging compliments, and watch the wheels go round. It is not always that visitors from abroad can enjoy the wondrous spectacle of American statesmen publicly engaged in thought. The exhibition of the Braunnhart convolutions will alone repay them for the trip.

The street sweepers have been directed not to disturb the mass of mud that has accumulated along the curbstone in front of the Examiner building. It is to be used during the coming campaign.

Politicians who were there, say that at the Ruef banquet Charley Shortridge killed any chance he might have had for consideration as a candidate for Congress from the Fifth. Nobody knows what Shortridge was expected to talk about, but, presumably, it was on something appropriate to the occasion. At the top of his voice he extolled the virtues of Matt Quay, Dan Burns, Bill Higgins, Sam Rainey and a bunch of others, all of whom have "passed out."

"Now, if he had only added his own name, Shortridge would have had a complete list of 'dead ones,'" said a politician. But he did say one good thing. When he arose, some one shouted, "Three cheers for Charley Shortridge!"

"That's a good idea," said Charley. And the waiters smiled.

"The woman in the case" has appeared in the Eppinger trial. She is the wife of Juror Plumbe, and she manifests her devotion to her spouse by ardently kissing him every morning when he appears in court after his enforced detention at the Palace Hotel. All the bachelors on the jury, after witnessing the salutations of Mrs. Plumbe, have decided to become benedicts. Judge Lawlor, meanwhile, is trying to figure out a method to lessen the demonstrations of domestic affection, particularly as it is reported that Mrs. Plumbe has expressed the opinion that Eppinger is a persecuted man, and that she knows what she would do if she were on the jury in her husband's place. It may develop that Mrs. Plumbe is a peach.

This practice of osculation in our juries should be frowned upon by our judges. We cannot think of anything more reprehensible than this innovation. Either give all the jurors the right of labial refreshment inalienably, or cut out those kissers in particular out a method to lessen the demonstrations of illege." It is unconstitutional, material and relevant.

The News Letter has frequently had occasion to severely criticize the methods of the street cleaning contractors, and to point out the danger to health, as well as the great annoyance arising from the neglect of sprinkling. Now comes a prominent New York physician, Dr. S. A. Knorp, who has made a study of street cleaning and its attendant ills, and in most forceful language he sustains the position taken by us, and urges that the law should be absolute requiring all streets to be sprinkled immediately prior to sweeping. Dr. Knorp says that five years' work as a street sweeper in New York makes the average individual a consumptive. This is due directly to the constant inhalation of all kinds of dust, and the consequent irritation of the pulmonary surfaces, which makes the invasion of the germ of tuberculosis more easy. The sweeping of streets in the dry state, he says, should be considered a crime against our fellow-men. It is not the air, but the dust in the air, which makes New York a dangerous place, particularly in summer, to people pre-disposed to pulmonary troubles. While, as a natural consequence of their occupation the street sweepers are the most severe sufferers, the citizens at large also suffer to a considerable degree. We are all apt to breathe the irritating and infectious dust raised by sweeping, by gusts of wind, by street cars, wagons and other vehicles. If street cleaning, under present conditions, renders the average employee consumptive within a few years, the sources of tuberculous infection are thereby increased. Furthermore, the majority of the street sweepers being of the poorer classes, they will become burdens to the community as soon as they cease to be bread-winners. Street cleaners should be provided with respiratory masks, particularly in very dusty localities.

All the statements of Dr. Knorp apply very forcibly to conditions in this city. Our streets are never clean. The sprinkling cart is seldom seen. It is the exception, rather than the rule, when streets in the residence district are sprinkled before being swept. In the down-town districts, because of the bitter complaints made by merchants, sprinkling is sometimes done, but in the Western Addition and the Mission, where the afternoon winds drive the dust in blinding clouds, sprinklers are never seen. The infectious dust fills houses and stores, and covers the clothing of people on the streets. There is urgent need for reformation in our methods of cleaning the streets.

Tom Riordan has refused to handle that gilded brick bearing the inscription: "Nominee for Congress in the Fourth Congressional District." He has business of greater importance to the Republic, for he has just organized a savings and investment company, with a capital of $1,000,000. All these politicians manage to move up toward the million dollar mark. How do they do it?

The University Regents have fixed the salary of the office of Secretary of the University at $6,000 per annum, and they are vainly seeking for a man possessing the necessary qualifications to fill the position acceptably. In raising the salary to the present figure they have shown wisdom far beyond that usually displayed in determining the amount to be paid the State officials. A good man is worth $6,000 a year. The University cannot afford to have a substitute who is willing, as McKeown was, to accept a much smaller salary, but who, like McKeown, may not be able to resist the temptation of appropriating some of the money that passes through his hands. The people of this State frequently complain of the poor material they get for officers, but they overlook the small inducement they offer to take office. Most of the State officers get only $250 a month, $1,000 a year less than is paid most of the officers of this city. A State officer has to bear the expense of a State campaign, and nearly all of them enter their offices at Sacramento burdened with debt. Their salaries are barely sufficient to maintain them and their families, and to pay the personal expenses they are forced to incur entertaining visitors to the State Capitol. They can save nothing from their incomes. Is it any wonder, then, that some of the weak ones fall by the wayside? The solution of the problem is to get better men, but that can be done only by raising salaries.

The authorities at Washington are becoming really paternal in their solicitude for the rater and his family. Local customs officers have received orders to arrest any captian who overcrowds an excursion boat, hereafter, and to revoke the nense of the boat. They have been directed to keep particular watch on Fourth of July excursions, and to keep tally on all the seekers for sensation who go over the gang-planks. That order, if enforced, should have some good effect, for it will certainly lessen the danger of loss of life. The wonder is that scores of lives have not been lost through accidents on excursion boats. They usually carry about four times as many passengers as the law allows; their crews are small, ignorant and inefficient, and their life-boats, when there are any, are wrecks held together by the double lashings that fasten them to the davits. Under this order, the customs officers might inspect the Oakland ferry boats, broad guage, on the 5:30 and 6 o'clock trips from this side, any evening. They always carry fifteen to twenty times the number of people that, upon an emergency, could be crowded into the life boats, and the company takes chances every day that would make a gambler tremble.

Thousands of people are going to the Yosemite this year. Thousands more would go if it were not for a deterrent factor. That mass of emerald green and dirty ochre that does duty for a painting in the ferry depot nave has had the effect of keeping people at home. They argue that if the Yosemite looks anything like this picture, the farther away they can remain the better. This explains the unpopularity of the "up-stairs" department of the depot. If that picture be removed, many more will use the nave as a promenade. The Yosemite painting was probably pictured by a "child wonder" as an example of what may be done in art without any previous tuition.

PLEASURE'S WAND

A TRUSTY TIP ON THINGS THEATRICAL.

GRAND—Mrs. Leslie Carter—"Du Barry"—The best show in the city at any price.

COLUMBIA—Sothern, "Proud Prince." An artistic, finished performance.

ALCAZAR—Stoek—Mirth and pathos—"Lovers Lane"—A great triumph for Frances Starr.

TIVOLI—"Robin Hood," in many respects the equal of the Bostonian performance.

CENTRAL—Lights o' London"—A very fair production.

FISCHER'S—"The Mormons"—A highly enjoyable comic operetta.

At last the Tivoli is producing something that is up to its old reputation, and in some instances beyond that fair repute. When I say that the performance of "Robin Hood" compares favorably with the work of the "Bostonians" in their palmiest days, you can rest assured that it is a wonderfully good production. Manager Strine has used the pruning knife to good advantage. He now has young women on the stage who sing well, act well, and look well.

The stunts by the chorus are invariably better than anything attempted by the Bostonians. The Will Scarlet of John Dunsmure is the very best basso we have heard in many a day, while Arthur Cunningham's "Little John" electrifies the house. Kate Condon is a singer from Singersville. Her notes are pure and sure, and she has made a splendid hit. Miss Edith Mason as "Maid Marion" wins the heart of her audience by her pretty stage presence. Her face is a sweet and a pleasant one, and her voice has the right timbre, although she has not yet caught the range of the house. William Schuster's "Friar Tuck" is splendidly rendered, and the "Guy of Gisborne" of Teddy Webb is like all Webb's work—excellent. Barron Berthald will come out all right in the weeks that are to come. His voice rose once or twice to the requirements of the opera in fine shape, but, as a rule, there was a huskiness and a way-down-in-the-throat delivery that was many miles from what it should have been. Dame Durden, in the hands of Bessie Fannehill, was a very good piece of work. There is not much of the dame, except in avoirdupois, but she can sing, and she sang better than she usually does.

Willard Simms suffered by comparison with Barnaby. He is a caricature of that grand old man in form and feature, but alas, not in voice. He has a falsetto squeak which jars discordantly, and which sounds unnatural. If it is an unnatural effect he should cut it out. He can dance very gracefully, and in the drunken scene he made the most acceptable sot I have ever seen. I believe Simms is an acquisition, and that Barnaby's shadow should not prejudice us against the newcomer.

I could sit for hours and listen to John Dunsmure or Cunningham in their respective solos. Here and in the chorus is where the new company shines. The audience was prolific all the week with its encores, and some of the old stand-bys who have been faithful in and out of season are busy congratulating one another on the enterprise which has given them something to praise without stint at the Tivoli. I predict packed houses for to-night and Sunday, and I wish a long life to Robin Hood and his merrie band at the Eddy-street house.

Frances Starr has struck a keynote in the hearts and heads of every man, woman and child in the audiences at the Alcazar. And these audiences are not small. Some evenings they have tested the capacity of the house. The play which serves to bring out the talent of this little actress and draw the crowds is "Lover's Lane." I have singled out Miss Starr because she is so phenomenally the character study in this symposium of truthful pictures. She takes the part of "Simplicity Johnson," a member of the household of the minister who is the hero of the play, the Reverend Thomas Singleton (Mr. Durkin) and she maintains the undivided interest of the audience from the start to the finish. There is no line or word which calls for adverse criticism. She is simply perfect and unalloyedly enjoyable. Mr. Mather takes the part of the bell ringer of the church, and his love passages with the "Melissy" of Miss Jennie Wiederman bring down the house. He doubles in this bill, and also assumes the part of Skittles, the village bill poster, who gets the minister into difficulty by posting up some pictures of girls in tights as an advertisement for a church affair. The play abounds with jollity and pathos, and the cast is an exceptionally long one. I cannot particularize further, nor can I say more than this: every actor and actress seems imbued with the sweet tone of the play, and player and people are close to one another in a heart-to-heart study of the best things in humanity.

Fischer's is producing a delightfully clean little skit called "The Mormons." The book is by Judsen Brussie and the lyrics by Lee Johnson. The book is generally acceptable, and the music is sparkling and catchy. The company is doing good ensemble work, and there are one or two of them that are phenomenally fine.

Alton is meeting with a hearty approval of the Seminole business, and he and the chorus deserve all the praise they receive. Mr. Keane in his song, "By-lo-Baby, By-lo," is splendid, and he secures fine appreciation from an audience which is always ready to applaud the "human interest" in a song.

The "Radium Girls" is a novel feature and highly entertaining, and if there is any one in San Francisco who has not seen this dance it would be a good idea to remember that it will not remain indefinitely at the Fischer house.

There has been considerable criticism of the book of this play. Most of this is adverse, and undeserved. There are certain things that militate against the phenomenal success of any production at Fischers. Women will not attend a house where unannounced smoking is permitted, and this accounts for the vast preponderance of the male man to see "The Mormons." Further than this, while Miss Aug is one of the best soubrettes, she does not, by any manner of means take the place of a Russell or an Amber. There is still a crying need for one big central feature, man or woman, at this house, and the best playwright in the world, with the finest playlet ever written, cannot supply the want. It would be a most unthinking critic who would misjudge in this case, and lay any blame on the playwright because of the character of the Fischer audiences or their lack in numbers.

The theatres of San Francisco are doing remarkably well considering the fact that there are thousands of people away at present. It is conservatively estimated that at least twenty thousand people have gone away to the summer resorts, and an army of no small dimension is at present at St. Louis, and yet a good show always draws a good house. It simply proves what I have always said: "San Francisco is the best show town in the country, but you cannot advertise a poor show into a large audience."

Mrs. Leslie Carter holds out well under the terrific strain of Belasco's "Du Barry." She begins the third and last week of a most successful engagement next Monday. If any of the readers of the News Letter have not seen "Du Barry," they may take the word of a critic whom they know is not easily pleased and go to the Grand Opera House and witness a performance of this celebrated play and this gifted woman. There is no need of being afraid of witnessing a performance that has been arranged for the purpose of setting off the star to the best advantage. The ladies and gentlemen with Mrs. Carter are all wonderfully clever. It is the best that has come down the theatrical pike in many moons, and you can take the word of a sour old critic for that!

Miss Marie Rawson, a blonde type, said to be a beauty and a clever actress, will take the part of "Hope Langham" in principal support of White Whittlesey in "Soldiers of Fortune."

Trask and Rogers, who have been starred with the best minstrel organizations in the country, will present their original singing and eccentric dancing act at the Chutes this coming week. Fyne and Dandy, comedy acrobats, will also be new, and the musical Harts will change their refined specialty. Lamont's Australian trained cockatoos, highly intelligent feathered actors, will continue their interesting performance; the dainty Fay sisters will give new songs and dances, and Hallie White, the pleasing soprano, will be heard in the latest illustrated songs.

The company in support of Mr. Whittlesey, at the Alcazar, for the summer season will be composed of the following ladies and gentlemen: Messrs. Osbourne, Hilliard, Conness, Byers and Barnum; Misses Belgarde and Elsmere, and Miss Rawson as leading lady.

INSURANCE

The case of Dr. Dogge of San Jose, who is suing the Fidelity and Casualty Company for a $14,712 claim, under one of its policies, and which was written about in a previous edition of this publication, but serves to show the danger of investing in insurance which does not insure.

The Fidelity and Casualty Company is contesting the claim on grounds which to it may, it is conceded, seem just.

Accident insurance companies of the Fidelity and Casualty stripe, however, are too prone to resort to the courts to defeat the claims arising under their contracts of insurance. The Fidelity and Casualty Company has in this respect achieved a record, and an examination of the court dockets will convince the most ardent defender of the company that it has apparently earned the title of being a fighter of claims. Whether the Dogge case be tried to a conclusion or whether the company compromises it out of court, the fact remains that the V. S. the Fidelity and Casualty is too easily found in the court records, and is so familiar that the intending insurer in this company naturally becomes dubious.

The financial standing of the corporation is unimpeachable, but it is not a pleasant prospect to a policy-holder to feel that he has to employ a collector to secure a payment of his claim.

The home office of the company is in New York, and it may be that the local management has some weight in its actions in litigating claims. There was some years ago scandal in regard to the then local manager of the company, but his successor, Mr. Bosworth, is so well known for his probity and ability that the blame for the dilatory tactics adopted by the company in the settling of its claims cannot be saddled on the manager here, but must be charged where it belongs, to the home office.

Mr. George W. Turner, the ex-manager of the Northwestern, is going on a trip to the East. He will visit the St. Louis Fair, and incidentally will bring back a company, or maybe two.

It is too bad, but the fact remains that the National Casualty of Detroit has been organized with a capital stock of $200,000, to take over the National Protective Society of that city and the American Casualty Company of Buffalo.

The Lloyds Insurance Companies, managed by that notorious firm of Farmer & Thompson, of Chicago, have losses of nearly a hundred thousand dollars and assets—well—not any.

In anticipation of the glorious Fourth of July, says the Record, over two hundred applications for permits to sell fireworks have been received by the New York Fire Department. The premises on which it is proposed to sell the fireworks will be inspected by the Bureau of Combustibles, which grants permits only after the regulations for safety have been complied with. When everything is in order the small boy and his larger brother will be on hand to see that a sufficient number of killed and wounded are provided in celebration of the glorious Fourth. Chicago has realized the danger of the physical fire hazard as well as the danger of the accident insurance risk. It has appointed a committee from amongst the Board of Aldermen, and the small boy or the big one must get a license from the committee prior to his firing off a single rocket or a nre-cracker on the coming Fourth.

A rather interesting decision to life insurance men was that rendered recently by the Common Pleas Court refusing judgment in the suit brought by the executors of Robert Kirkpatrick, against the Metropolitan Life; he was hanged for murder. The policy contained a clause to the effect that if Kirkpatrick, within one year from the issue, died by his own hand or act, the company would not be liable. On June 16, 1902, the company was notified that Kirkpatrick had been convicted, but continued to receive premiums. On October 25, 1903, the man was executed. Judge Ralston, in his opinion, said: "We consider that upon grounds of public policy the law of Pennsylvania forbids a recovery upon a policy where the insured has been executed for crime whether the policy contains a clause upon the subject or not, and even if it stipulates that the company shall be liable." At the present time this is especially interesting to California life-men, since practically the same case is before the courts of this State.

New York and Chicago are hereafter to take care of their firemen. The day or night when a fireman is to be left to take care of his injuries is passed; in the future he will have "the first aid to the injured." In New York, for instance, two trucks are sent out to every fire, and one first aid bag will go with every two trucks. The bag will be equipped as follows: Aseptic bandages of gauze and muslin; absorbent cotton and aseptic gauze in nickel-plated tubes that are supplied with adjustable openings, thus allowing of frequent sterilization; aseptic needles of different sizes, in packages that are not to be opened till wanted for use; a tourniquet for stopping hemorrhage; splints for broken bones or bad sprains; seven air-tight bottles, one of which contains bichloride tablets, with which to prepare antiseptic solutions; a bottle of iodoform; two bottles of oil for burns; carbolic acid for disinfecting; a pair of surgeon's scissors. By the time that the amateur has used all this lot of stuff it is safe to say the fireman will have risen in his wrath and killed the kindergarten nurse or will have collapsed himself. The first aid to the injured is the dream of a theorist, and not the demonstration of practicability.

"WHY WILLIE WOULDN'T."

Willie Green lives on Hyde street, near Golden Gate Park. The day was hot, the asphalt on the avenue was soft, and they were playing "molasses candy."

For some reason Willie's mamma wanted him to come into the house. She called him, but Willie wouldn't come. She coaxed; when she threatened he began to cry, but still Willie wouldn't.

Willie's mamma went after him, and he stood still until she came. She put her arm around him, but Willie wouldn't lift. He was stuck fast in his "molasses candy." To his mother, it appeared the only way to get him out would be to lift the street. Then a bright idea struck her. She unbuttoned his shoes and carried him in his stocking feet into the house.

The cool winds as evening closed hardened the asphalt. Chauffeurs wondered that night why the road was so rough, but no one knew save Willie, and he got a new pair of shoes for his knowledge.

SECURE A GREAT ACTRESS.

Mr. George Tyler, theatrical manager, gives a very readable account of his trip to Paris to secure the engagement of the great actress Rejane and the Italian actor Novelli. While Mr. Tyler was in London, he made arrangements for the appearance of the gifted American actress, Miss Eleanore Robson, for September, at the Duke of York's Theatre, in Zangwill's "Merely Mary Ann."

Incidental to the London trip, Mr. Tyler purchased an automobile. He makes some interesting remarks on the subject, which will bear re-printing:

"As regards the pleasure part of my visit," said Mr. Tyler, "one of my purposes in coming to Paris was to buy an automobile. I was at once taken possession of by all the dealers in the city as soon as my intention was known, and from the first day I arrived in Paris till now, I hadn't a moment to myself. I was simply tossed from one vehicle to another, spun around on big automobiles and small automobiles like one of the doomed shades of Dante. I made only thirty-two trips backward and forward to Versailles. Every bone in my system at last began to ache, and my judgment was all mixed up in smoke and petrol. I decided yesterday to put an end to my martyrdom by purchasing a fourteen horse-power Renault. It is a perfect beauty, but I don't want to see it to-day. I have had enough of automobiling just now and have to lock myself up for business. In a few days I shall start on a tour to Italy in my new trap. I shall go to Milan, Florence and Rome."

Pleasure's Wand.

With E. H. Sothorn's final performance of "The Proud Prince" this Saturday evening at the Columbia Theatre, the brilliant season of 1903-4 at that house will come to a close. Commencing Monday night, the theatre will be dark for a period of two weeks, preceding a long line of star attractions to be seen here during the next season, which will be inaugurated on Monday night, July 11th, by Ethel Barrymore, in her greatest success, "Cousin Kate." The announcement that Charles Frohman is bringing Miss Barrymore all the way from London to play this special engagement will be received with every mark of pleasure on the part of the theatre-goers in San Francisco. Miss Barrymore has achieved a great triumph in this delightful comedy, and has been enormously successful with it this season. All theatrical precedents were broken in New York, where in one season she played three separate engagements to immense audiences, the house being sold out at every performance.

Valerie Bergere, the piquante, clever and graceful comedienne who scored such a hit here two years ago in "Billie's First Love," will return to the Orpheum this coming week, supported by a competent company. "His Japanese Wife," a one-act playlet by Grace Griswold, and a tremendous New York success, will be her new offering. Miss Bergere is a capable artist in every respect, and she injects just enough humor in her work to keep the plot intact and at the same time to take the minds of the audience from the pathos which creeps up now and then between the lines. Gallagher and Barrett, Irish comedians and laugh-inducers of the first water, will make their first appearance in San Francisco.

Henry Miller is to appear in Henry Arthur Jones's new play, "Joseph Entangled." Charles Frohman secured the play for Miller and will have that star, supported by a big company, when it is produced for the first time in America next month at the Columbia Theatre. The piece is to be one of the first offerings of the next season in New York, to which place it will be taken after its premiere in this city.

They have removed Ferris Hartman from the stage performances at the Tivoli, for which thanks are due. Mr. Hartman will now give his undivided attention to the stage management, and there is no better stage manager in the country. I believe in rendering "unto Caesar," etc.

The Central will continue its popular series of big attractions next Monday evening with the sterling New York success, "The Power of the Cross." All through the East, this heart-interest drama has had splendid runs, and the critics have been high in their praises of its thrilling plot and powerful climaxes. The play is as full of action as an egg is full of meat, and the four acts are alive with striking and startling episodes, while the tragic and pathetic qualities of the piece are relieved by comedy that is delightful and fascinating.

Knowing the previous popularity of White Whitelsey at the Alcazar, I have had no hesitancy in saying that the coming engagement of that bright young man will be a successful one. He has been working very hard, and he will astonish his plentiful supply of old friends by his newer ability. He is to give us Richard Harding Davis's "Soldiers of Fortune." This is a dramatization by the veteran playwright, Augustus Thomas. It is a thrilling story of South American adventure, located in the supposititious Republic of Olancho. Magazine readers are familiar with the plot, and as people remember what they read in the magazines and forget what they read in the daily papers, it is safe to guess that "Soldiers of Fortune" is bound to have a large following nightly. Thousands have read the story.

San Francisco people who have seen Sothern in his inimitable acting will be astonished and no doubt edified at the following from the Los Angeles Examiner:

"Mr. Sothern is an actor without subtlety; he cannot fill its requirements. Mr. Sothern has gifts of person and of voice. He has a pretty touch of romance and a most graceful mode of love-making. He is unwise to sacrifice these assets in the attempt to win what is forever beyond him. He has not the mental bent which would enable him to grasp either the bizarre or the tragic."

The Examiner's critic is a Miss Skinner, and as a critic, she certainly skins 'em all. The actual knowledge she possesses as to what constitutes a subtle actor would fill about one-half of a page of a child's primer and not crowd it.

This is the last week of the "Eight Radium Girls" at Fischer's Theatre.

A Revelation.

If there are doubting Thomases or Maidens fair or those unfair, who fain would be fair, let them use Dr. T. Felix Gouraud's Oriental Cream and prove the efficacy of what the proprietor has so long tried to impress on the minds of all, in nearly every part of the World. As a Skin Purifier and Beautifier it has no equal or rival. If the reader would prove the virtues of Oriental Cream, use it where a scratch or slight cut, or where a black-head or pimple is troubling you, then you see its healing and purifying qualities—if it does its work well, then read the advertisement again for further testimony of its virtues, and by using Oriental Cream renew both youth and beauty.

BY THE AUTOCAR

The executive committee of the Automobile Club of California has issued a circular calling upon the members to help increase the membership of the club.

This is a call which should be heeded, for there is strength in numbers. The two hundred members in the club and the automobilists at large do not appreciate the club and what it may do for them if they will only stand back of it and lend it a helping hand.

The Automobile Club is a kind of insurance to the automobilist. The local club is a protection against adverse legislation and the many other obstacles to be met with at the present "kindergarten" stage of the sport on the Coast.

With the proper kind of support on the part of the automobilists, the club could become a factor in the making of laws for the highways of the State.

The average automobilist will howl about how unjustly he is treated, while on the roads, yet he will not take time or give his services to an organization that is trying to eradicate just the things he complains of. Then, again, he will more than likely turn on the club and its officers and complain of them. He never stops to think that the work of the officers is a "labor of love"; that they get nothing for their trouble but kicks, and carry on the club work at the expense of their own business.

Let every one who owns an automobile promise to himself that he will give the club all the support he can for one year as an experiment. Just try it, and see what the result will be. If this is done, by all, it can be safely stated that the results will be far beyond the hopes of the most enthusiastic.

The annual race for the Gordon Bennett cup for 1904 is now a matter of history. The honors were taken by France, with the winner of last year in second place. From the spectators' point of view it was tame, as no one was hurt or killed.

A warrant was sworn out a few days ago for the arrest of Barney Oldfield, the American champion automobile racer, on the charge of running his machine on Franklin avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, at the rate of thirty-five miles an hour. This is nineteen miles faster than permitted by law. Oldfield, upon learning that a warrant had been issued for him, telephoned police headquarters that he would come to the central station and give himself up.

Barney must keep before the public.

One of the most successful automobile tours ever made on the Coast was completed recently by Dr. C. B. Brown, of Portland, Oregon, in the "Samantha." The "Samantha" is a beautiful White touring car, which conveyed five people safely to Los Angeles from San Francisco, and then after a two-weeks' stay in the Southern metropolis, brought its passengers sound and safe again to San Francisco. It was a remarkable trip of nearly 2,000 miles, and with no puncture and but one small breakage on the auto. The pleasure of the journey was only occasionally marred by bad roads. Dr. Brown started on the trip, acting as his own chauffeur.

A broken diaphragm was the only repair needed, the car had never to be touched by a repair man, only to be cleaned and oiled, and the engine has never been taken apart or tightened up for adjustment. The auto trip was taken principally for Mrs. Brown's health, as the doctor said sunshine was the only cure. Mrs. Brown's recovery has been marvelous, and to use her expression, "Samantha has done it all. This alone has more than paid us for what hardships we had to endure."

H. D. Saville, examiner for Park licenses, instead of "dodging the baby," took a run in a White touring car across the bay last Sunday.

Among other White owners out touring last Sunday were L. P. Lowe, Robert Piper, Return Roberts and Fred W. Gregory.

Mr. Lowe drove his steam touring car to Byron Springs. Messrs. Piper and Roberts took their families in their machines to the Garden City. Mr. Gregory, of the White Company, had his wife and E. C. Ward and wife, of Fresno, out for a spin through the Presidio and Park.

J. O. Bradney purchased a White touring car last week, and made his first run last Sunday to San Jose. He enjoyed the ride immensely, and thinks motoring the genuine sport.

One of the most remarkable trips of the season was just made by Mr. John Hopkins Spring of Fruitvale in his new White touring car to Wawona and the Big Trees in Calaveras County. Mr. Spring, accompanied by Mrs. Spring, their son, and a chauffeur, left their home on Thursday, June 9th, ran that night to Gilroy, which is seventy miles from their home. The roads were excellent, and it was a beautiful moonlight night and the run was greatly enjoyed. The next morning they left Gilroy and ran over the Pacheco Pass fifty miles to Los Banos for lunch. From Los Banos they traveled to Madera, a distance of 50 miles.

They left Madera the next morning and rode to Raymond, distant twenty-five miles. Grub Gulch was their objective point, as Mr. Spring was going into the mountains to examine mining property.

The next day they took a side trip of fifty miles into the Sunset District, where the roads were bad but the scenery magnificent.

On the following day they made up their minds to visit the famous big trees on the Road to Yosemite Valley, and made the run from Grub Gulch to Awanie in good time. The day was spent very pleasantly, and the return trip made in the afternoon to Grub Gulch. Mr. Springs says he would not advise timid people to undertake to spend the night at Grub Gulch. It is the only place for miles where water can be obtained, as there is a magnificent spring there, and during the night the bears from the surrounding mountains could be heard clambering down the sides of the hill for water. Mr. Spring says that there is great interest in automobiling in that section of the country, as there has been only a few automobiles which have undertaken this arduous trip to the Big Trees.

The following morning, Mr. Spring hastily packed his luggage, and the run from Grub Gulch to Madera was a record-breaking one. They ran on into Los Banos for the night, and the next day the run home was made in good time.

Mr. Horace A. Beale, Jr., of Philadelphia, driving his own four-cylinder 16-22 h. p. gasoline Locomobile, won the George T. Lippincott cup on June 11th. This cup was offered for the first car that would leave Philadelphia and arrive at Atlantic City. There were seven starters, but Mr. Beale won the cup with half an hour handicap against him. He was not arrested for breaking the speed limit, as stated in the newspapers. The time between Philadelphia and Atlantic City was 2 hours 12 minutes.

Our representative, in his visits to auto headquarters, visited Andrews, Keenan and Blasauf, and noticed a powerful hydraulic press in operation, also a traveling crane, which the firm has just completed. The equipment for good and rapid repair work in this shop is unexcelled; the workshop is light and neat, and they deserve to succeed.

Return Roberts, a prominent business man of Madera, accompanied by his wife and daughter and Miss Smith, made a very successful but difficult run overland from Fresno to this city recently. The overflow of the San Joaquin River caused the party a great deal of trouble, but the White car managed to get through safely, and landed the party of enthusiastic motorists here none the worse for the journey.

The Olds Motor Works of Detroit is just in receipt of a cablegram from Milan, Italy, stating that an Oldsmobile runabout was awarded the gold medal in the touring contest at Milan, held under the auspices of the Automobile Club of Italy. The medal was won in competition with a 10-horse power Tisenach, a 9-horse-power Isottafraschini, and a 9-horse-power Tourinia, and a Renault. The course was 900 kilometres in length, and, according to the rules under which the contest was held, all adjustments were forbidden during the contest.

Mr. Charles Mifflin Hammond, a brother-in-law of President Roosevelt, Mrs. Hammond of Upper Lake, B. B. Stanley and William O. Edmonds, made a trip last Friday in Mr. Hammond's new model B. Cadillac over the mountains to Upper Lake. A letter from Mr. Hammond states that the party had a very delightful trip, but the last fifty miles the dust was nearly up to the axle, and the grades ranged from twelve to thirty per cent. For six straight miles no part of the grade was less than eight per cent, and from that to twenty-five per cent.

New Model B Cadillacs were delivered last week to F. H. Birge, San Jose; A. L. Hendricks, Eureka; H. H. Myers, San Francisco; H. H. Owens, San Francisco; Charles Mifflin Hammond, Upper Lake; Frank H. Upon his return to America, he remained for some time in New York and other Eastern cities, and on his way West visited the Winton factory. Mr. Aldrich also visited the Locomobile factory at Bridgeport, Conn., and while there received considerable personal attention from Mr. Riker. Mr. Aldrich has expressed himself as being especially well-pleased with the shop methods and modern machinery installed in their plant.

COLONEL WATTERSON AT THE GUNS.

An Eastern publication speaks of W. R. Hearst, the assumed Presidential candidate, as follows:

Rather than lift the screen and tell them what could not be denied, we prefer to believe—nay, we do believe—that the young sybarite, who is back of it—the invisible millionaire reckless of consequences—the rich nondescript aspiring to be President of the United States—is as insane as the young gentleman who is said to have fired the Ephesian dome, not to mention the worn-out voluptuary, who they tell us fiddled while Rome was burning. Surrounded by nothing but his money-bags, he imagines that all things may be bought by money. Surrounded by his bodyguard of more or less intellectual retainers, he fancies himself a god. Used to no element except money, bred to no appliances except its lavish expenditure, considering no force except its pressure, he thinks to buy the nomination as a bill of goods, and to compass an election by the process of turning over a bill of goods and getting a profit on it. Fancy such a person posing as a particular friend of the lowly and the poor.

The attention of National Guard officers is called to the latest army regulation uniforms and equipments sold by the Pettibone Bros. Manufacturing Company, 19 New Montgomery street, this city. International Congress of Women

Comparatively little is known in this Western part of the country of the significance of the International Congress of Women that has just concluded its notable session in Berlin, Germany. The organized body back of this gathering was the International Council of Women, a branch of which exists in this city. The local body affiliated with this world-wide movement has been suffering the vicissitudes incident to every innovation. As far as outward appearances go, it has been making snail-pace progress for the "council idea," as the underlying principle is called, involves a scheme somewhat Utopian and much more comprehensive than the club idea. In the former scheme, all the endeavor is for the benefit of womankind, and in the latter, for the comfort and happiness of the individual members or the individual organizations. It is likely that the local council will grow more rapidly when Mrs. John F. Swift returns from Berlin. She is president of the San Francisco Council and also president of the National Council of Women, but she has been so busy with the concerns of the larger bodies, and has had to be away from the city so much of the past year, that the local council has been simply "waiting."

The story of the International Council is a long one, but stripped of every detail, it is as follows:

Away back in 1888, through the masterful plans of Miss Susan B. Anthony, the late Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Mrs. May Wright Sewall and Mrs. Rachel Foster Avery, the first International Council of Women was held in Washington, D. C. It was a sort of celebration of what had been accomplished by these pioneers in the cause of women, and was so eminently successful that Mrs. May Wright Sewall proposed a permanent National Council of Women for the United States, and logically, an International Council. The scope of this was so all-comprehensive, the ideals so high, that many entirely friendly, thought that the women of the world were not ready for co-operation on such broad lines. Mrs. Sewall was confident of the outcome, and her outlook was clear. The time was fitting, and the work has been growing since then, until club miracles have happened. The object was and is to bring into one large, active, fraternal body all associations of women, no matter their individual purposes, that all may work for the few things that are of concern and interest to every one of them.

It was decided that the International Congress should convene every five years in some part of the globe. Every one remembers the great Woman's Congress held in Chicago. That was the second of the quinquennial conventions, although there were many who thought at that time that the Congress was a sort of gratuitous organization. Mrs. Sewall was asked to become international president, but she declined, and urged the election of Lady Aberdeen, which followed. The third quinquennial was held in London in 1899. It was there that ladies of quality sat shoulder to shoulder with women not at all of their own social standing, something never known in England. Both the titled women and those of the people were delighted by the experience, and each frankly admitted the benefit derived from this association. Each found that she had interests in common with her neighbor, and with Kipling, they knew that the "Colonel's lady and Judy O'Grady were sisters under their skin." At the London gathering, Lady Aberdeen was made honorary president, and Mrs. Sewall president.

As the women of seventeen countries were interested in the recent Berlin Convention, it is easy to see why the great news agencies sent cables around the world of its proceedings.

The women of the councils are anxious for uniform divorce laws, uniform laws on child labor, and uniform laws regarding property rights of women. A big undertaking, but some strong levers have been wedged under the load.

"Golf"

By Lady Algy.

Society seems to have given the double cross to golf. The smart set no longer blows over the wind swept green out at the Presidio. Of course, society, plural number, masculine gender, still swings a golf club, but "Nancy Etticoat" in her short petticoat, has deserted it. 'Tis not because summer has a date with My Lady to wander through sun-checked glades. Of a truth, the girls gave golf the go-by all winter. Those days that raised the interrogation "Is Sunday for God or for golf?" have gone a-glimmering. The week is no longer too short for the girls to get their fill of golf. Indeed, most of them have come to the conclusion that golf's a fill anyhow!

The reason for this is not far to seek. The trouble lies not with the Hoot Mon's sport itself, but with the ladies. The unsportsmanlike spirit that has characterized all their contests has gradually undermined the popularity of the game. Last winter, Alice Hager and Miss Cheseborough were the only members of the "old guard" who went out to the Presidio links. Mary Scott Martin and the other Blingumites, who were so keen about golf, turned a frigid shoulder on the pastime. Some of the cynics hinted that it was Mrs. Peter Martin's outspoken aversion toward golf that frosted the hearts of those who played the game "follow your leader" with the Newport matron. But this has had no more to do with the thing, tra la, than the flowers that bloom in the spring.

Even if Mrs. Peter Martin had been a keen golfer, it is a question whether she could have routed the anti-golf spirit that seems to prevail. The methods of the one-time ardent competitors were unspeakable. Snobocracy stalked the links, and a player who was not in the Blingum set was snubbed into defeat. The vision of Mrs. Henry Scott in her pink hunting jacket following Mrs. Gilman Brown uphill and down dale, "rooting" all the while for Caro Crocket, still haunts the putting-green. When the Oakland Club sent down its champion, then Miss Moffitt, she was treated in a manner scarcely sportsmanlike, but she won out just the same. Every other "outsider" was subjected to the same "courtesy" until the contests became a reproach to the Burlingame Club, under whose auspices they were given.

But it was the wheel within the wheel that slipped a cog finally and stopped the whole machinery. Those on the inside became jealous of each other; there was always so much fret and fuss connected with every tournament that most of the players decided that a game which strained friendship until you could hear it creak, wasn't worth while, and the sport languished.

The report that the San Francisco golf club had been asked to pack its things and go because the military wanted to play in its own back yard, is not true. As a matter of fact, the army authorities have never sent any "keep off the grass" signs to the golf club. But the members of that organization have been seriously thinking of building links and a club-house out near Ingleside that will make the proposed new home of the Oakland contingent look like a wayside inn. The directors feel that this move would put new life into the club. More commodious quarters could be built out there, and the thing run on a more elaborate scale than is feasible on Government land, that may be taken back at any time. Of course, the present situation is very get-at-able, but in these automobile days, it is figured that the added distance to Ingleside would not be considered a handicap.

"Then, too, the ladies would come back to us," said one of the powers that be in the club. "The site we have in mind is very protected. You know it is the wind that has chilled their enthusiasm. It's hard for the ladies to 'butt' against the sort of wind that whistles over the Presidio hills. If we can get out of the wind the girls will golf as enthusiastically as ever."

Well, perhaps they will! But they'll have to take a reef in their dispositions first, and learn something about the ethics of the sportsman.

GROUND FLOOR STUDIO

The Forest Stream

Glamour of sound; the far-off silver ringing
 Of errant orchestra of fitful chimes,
 And harmony of myriad voices singing
 Celestial melodies and fairy rhymes,
 Processions swaying with the torches gleaming,
 And all the pomp of mystery and rite—
 These things I see as half-awake, half-dreaming,
 I hear the forest stream flow through the night.

A tiny stream, and I beside it, drowsing
 O'er memories the crooning waters make:
 Old ghosts of sorrows, wraiths of pain arousing,
 And vain regrets for that I did not take.
 So with the diapason of the troubles,
 Mingles the music of the chanting bright,
 And chafing life frets into foaming bubbles
 Doomed to the silence of the pool at night.

—Roland Whittle.

COMPENSATION.

While an English parson was making the rounds of a jail, he found an attentive listener in one of the worst of the prisoners, and with righteous zeal proceeded to make the most of his opportunity to save the soul of the sinner. Taking the Parable of the Prodigal Son, he repeated it most impressively. The man listened with his face close to the wicket.

"Say that once again," said the prisoner, in the most pleading of tones. Again the parson recited the parable, laying stress on the new beauties that he was bringing out. The prisoner was almost in tears when he asked for a third repetition of the great old parable. The minister went laboriously but earnestly through it for the third time, and then turning to the man said:

"My friend, will you tell me exactly what part of the parable impressed you most. I have never found any one so deeply impressed as you in that parable, and it will be a great satisfaction to know how it affects you."

"Oh, good parson," replied the man quickly, "it was not the parable at all. I was enjoying your breath. I have not had a drink of whiskey for six months."

San Francisco now has a "Fruiterie," modeled upon the Paris and New York places of like design. It has always seemed a strange thing to tourists and travelers that in a city situated, as San Francisco is, in a fruit center, that we have had no high-class fruit establishment.

The new fruiterie in Polk street, near Sutter, is not a member of the Retail Fruit Dealers' Association, but obtains its supplies direct from the country. The establishment is fitted up in a most attractive manner, and the company intends making a specialty of high-class fruits of all varieties. A specialty is made of fancy baskets of fruits, specially arranged for tourists. This is a more substantial compliment to present to visitors than the usual custom of sending flowers. The company is incorporated. George L. Putnam is president; the directors are F. M. Hill, Pacific Coast representative of the Mexican and Orient Railroad Company, and George W. Hallock, passenger agent of the Pacific Coast Steamship Company. Sol. Jacobs, secretary of the company, has had years of experience in the fruit business. It is the intention of the Fruiterie to establish branches throughout the city.

entry miles of territory for th' other nations of the world to quarrel over." That same man would tell a feller that was a-goin' to be hanged in ten minutes not to spend his money for a chew, on th' ground that it's th' thrifty, savin' folks without bad habits that gits along best.—Judge.

HARD TO UNDERSTAND.

In the Midland Hotel—and several others here, too, for that matter—the parlor rooms are marked by letters instead of by numbers. This led to a funny mix-up last night in the Midland's elevator between the rather deaf negro operator and a testy traveler, who was in a hurry to get to bed. This man had been assigned to parlor U, and he started in the elevator for it. As he entered he said:

"U."

The Senegambian, not hearing well, looked at him for further remarks, but none came. The elevator went on up, and the darkey turned to the traveler and asked: "What flooah, boss?"

"U," the man answered again.

"Yesser, dat's me, but wah you want to go?"

"U! U!" the man repeated testily. "Can't you hear?"

"Yasser, Ah done said dat am me—" began the negro.

Then the man found his senses and said:

"I want to go to parlor U; can't you understand?"

The negro took him back five floors and dumped him out.

"Never could understand some folks," was all he said.—Kansas City Journal.

AN OLD SALT'S OBSERVATIONS.

"Ain't he calm, though!" they said about the man. "Was he hurt in th' accident?" I asked. "No," says they; "but some of his friends was." An' I had to go away to laugh.

I'd rather be jest me, Obed Burgee, master of the Lyddy, than Mary Queen of Scots. If I don't run my ship to suit the people, they jest snigger, say I'm a fool, an' run along. But when she did not run her kingdom so's to suit 'em they didn't snigger—not a bit. They chopped. And it was her neck they chopped. She died of it.

There was a mighty affectionate married couple on my ship one v'yage. "I tell you," the husband said to me, "that I owe my professional success to her." "What's your business?" I asked then. "Why, I'm a doctor," he replied. "How was it that she helped you?" I asked then. "She started up free cooking schools," he answered. An' I'm still a-wonderin' what he meant.

I lived next door to a philosopher last winter. "Ain't you goin' to clean the snow off your sidewalks?" I asked of him. "Thought I'd wait a while," he answered. How long you goin' to wait?" I asked him. "Thought I'd wait about two months," said he. "But that'll be spring, an' there won't be no snow to clean off." I says angrily. "That's what I was thinkin'," says the philosopher.

There's some folks can find things to criticise anywhere and everywhere. "What," says the' old sailor when we was discussin' of th' Panama Canal, "would happen if the tides in the two oceans should happen to come different? Say Atlantic was low an' Pacific high. Why, th' old Pacific 'd jest rush through into th' Atlantic. Then s'pose some fool critter shut th' locks. Why, then New Jersey an' Great Britain they'd be drowned out along with everything in east America an' west Europe, Asia and Africa. While east Asia—th' Chinese would have ten million

EXPOSITION NOTES

World's Fair Grounds, June 19, 1904.

The extent to which linoleum is made and used in Germany is well illustrated in the Palace of Liberal Arts. Samples of every variety of this now popular floor covering are shown there by some of the leading makers of Germany. The inland variety of cork linoleum is of particular interest. In this, different colors of the cork composition are so fitted together as to form a most beautiful pattern, which will remain during the life of the linoleum. Some beautiful designs are shown in the exhibit, and the practical uses of linoleum as a floor covering is demonstrated by its use in covering the entire floor of the German section of this and several other buildings in the Exposition Grounds.

—John Dewar & Sons have made a novel exhibit for their distillery at Perth, Scotland, in the Palace of Agriculture. They have reproduced Scott's "House of the Fair Maid of Perth," and the only exhibit in the building is a big, brawny Scotch Highlander, who attracts a large crowd with the lively Scotch airs he plays on his bagpipe. He is known as the Pipe Major McDonald, and carries several medals from the Seathorth Highlanders and the Black Watch with whom he did service.

—Two hundred pounds of candy are being made every ten minutes in the Palace of Agriculture. Calvin S. Morris, of St. Louis, has an exhibit of the latest improved candy-making machines, and will manufacture fifteen or twenty kinds of candy to show process. A booth made of candy confetti adds to the beauty of the exhibit.

—The perfume factory in the Palace of Liberal Arts is in daily operation, and the curious processes necessary to the production of the odorous liquids are very attractive to visitors. Every part of the process is carried on in the display, which is located in the southeast corner of the building.

—A curious old bronze idol has just been added to the Chinese section of the Liberal Arts Building. It is made from solid bronze, weighs 2,000 pounds, and is a relic of the dynasty of Ming, one of the Chinese rulers who reigned about 1404 A. D. The idol represents a figure having eleven heads arranged in a pyramid five heads high, and 42 arms and hands, half on each side of the body. The idol is in a good state of preservation, and is a striking reminder of the religion of the period of history in China which it represents.

—One of the exhibits of the Department of Liberal Arts which is not in the Liberal Arts Building, is that of machinery for making concrete blocks. The company making this exhibit is now operating one of these machines; and is daily turning out the concrete blocks which will be used in erecting a building for the display of the machines. This work is being done on the site of the building in the northeast corner of the grounds near the Press Building. The building, which will be completed in about a month, will be 30 feet square, with a wide porch, 20 by 30 feet along one side. It will be wholly constructed of hollow concrete blocks, the product of the machine exhibited, and will serve both as an office for the exhibitor and a place of rest for visitors, as well as an exhibit building for the machines. The machines, which are adjustable, will be shown in operation during the summer, making blocks of artificial stone of all sizes, shapes and colors, some with hollow centers and others as solid as the natural stone which they are intended to take the place of.

—The largest talking machine in the world is on exhibition in the Palace of Liberal Arts. It is an exact duplicate of the talking machine sold to the Shah of Persia, and is constructed to operate with several cylinders at the same time, so that different parts of the same song or other musical selection may be produced simultaneously, with much greater volume and harmony than with the ordinary machine.

—San Luis Obispo and Monterey Counties completed their exhibits in the California section in the Palace of Agriculture. Fruits grown in the counties are displayed in glass jars tastefully arranged about the booth. Potatoes 12 inches long, and sugar beets of immense size are exhibited with samples of big wheat. Another industry represented is that of canning clams and abalones. Abalones are a deep-sea shell-fish, procured by Japanese divers, and are exhibited in glass jars in the different stages of preparation.

—The following entries to the Air Ship Competition Meet, to be held at the World's Fair in the early part of July, have been received by Mr. Willard A. Smith, Chief of Department of Transportation: Edward Hutchinson, Austin Station, Chicago; Charles Stivin, 1443 Third avenue, New York; S. M. Williams, San Francisco, Cal; Emery Curtis and Geo. Davis of Gillespie, New York. Santos Dumont, with his new air ship No. 7, will sail for this country on June 11th. In all, eighty contestants have applied for admission to meet. An entry fee of $250 is required of each contestant. Those named have paid the required fee.

—A panoramic exhibit of a flouring mill in operation is that of the Pillsbury-Washburn Flour Mills Co., of Minneapolis, Minn., in the Palace of Agriculture. In this exhibit is a practical demonstration of the growing of wheat, the making of flour, and the baking of bread. Large photographs in panels about the pure white booth show the country in which the wheat is grown, the multiplicity of machinery used in perfecting the ground, the harvesting and threshing of the grain. On one side of the booth is a reproduction of the Pillsbury Mills, showing its location on a hill, and the water power that runs the mill. A moving freight train loaded with the products of the mill adds to the scenic effect of the picture. The flour passes through this mill and is run through mixers into dough troughs, moulding machines and into electric ovens, where it is baked and passed out to the critical housewife to sample. In connection with the flour exhibit is a case divided transversely into eighty compartments, exhibiting the various milling separations from the time the wheat leaves the field until it becomes flour. The starch products of the flour are also washed to show the large proportion of gluten in the flour.

Japanese Active and Cautious.

The Japanese armies are making what seems to be substantial progress in circumventing Russia in Manchuria, but their movements are conspicuously slow and with great caution. This is not an indication of exhaustion, however, but rather that they are in the enemy's country and getting further from their own base of supplies, which in turn enables the Russians to concentrate their scattered forces.

Something happens about every day that reveals genuine military genius and staying qualities. This was shown in the battle with the Russian General Stakelberg at Vafangron last week. The Russian had carefully planned to turn the Japanese right, and was massing his forces to make the attack, but just as he was good and ready to make the onslaught he found the Japanese had not only anticipated his plans, but had completely outwitted him by attacking his own right flank in great force, with imminent danger of having his army doubled up and stampeded. He quickly changed the order to attack to one for a general retreat, but before he could extricate his forces he had to do some hard fighting, which cost him several thousand men and a lot of field guns and small arms, besides army and hospital stores in large quantities. The victory for the Japanese was by no means a decisive one, but it adds proof to the before established fact that the Japanese Generals are quicker to see and profit by the mistakes of the enemy than the Russians are. In fact, the Japanese have not once been out-Generaled or lost a single battle, though of course no great engagement has yet taken place.

It is reported that the crippled ships of the Port Arthur squadron are not only ready for service on the sea, but have been re-inforced by several of the Vladivostock squadron slipping into the harbor during a heavy fog. This should mean the risk of a naval engagement with the Japanese ships, however great the seeming odds against the Russians might be. To sum up the events of the past week, the Japanese have made some headway at every point, but have secured no pronounced success, while the Russians have lost at every point, though to no dangerous disadvantage, and they have gained much by having the Port Arthur squadron re-inforced and put in readiness to risk the sea and attacks on the coast of Japan.

Russia's Internal Troubles.

The situation in Russia seems to grow more hostile to the war party, and in turn the war party is adding severity to the already severe administration of martial law. But for all that, the public clamor for the return to power of the deposed ministers is growing, and there is a suspicion that the Czar and his immediate advisors are not disposed to check the increasing cry for a radical change in the administration of the nation's public concerns. The influence of the Czar seems to now lie almost wholly in the superstition of the Greek Church following, who regard him as Christ's vicar on earth, and that he can make no mistake in matters which involve the church and State as one. But whether he dare appeal to the people on that ground is complex as well as a perplexing question for him to deal with. It is a two-edged sword, and could easily be made to cut both ways. Anyway, the war party is in full control of the Government machinery, and at this distance it looks as if it has all to lose by giving way, and the chance of the hazard of the die by holding on. It is pretty clear, too, that the war in Manchuria is necessary to the plundering schemes of the war party, and that its prolongation will be urged and provided for. The war party want no great victory or great defeat. The excuse for its existence would be destroyed by either, but meanwhile its brutal and inhuman rule at home and an expensive war in Asia, may so inflame public indignation that an uprising of the people cannot be avoided even by the severity of martial law and the quick execution of malcontents wherever found. The greatest weakness the war party has as yet exhibited, and which is so weak that it is silly, is manufactured interviews with well-known Generals, in which sport is made of Japanese strategy and the unscientific handling of their troops. To belittle the game, the science or the strategy of the man that is kicking you about as if you were a football, does not appeal to an observer as being common sense. Undoubtedly the Russian war party is doing good service for Japan, though not purposely, by inflaming public sentiment against the Russian powers that be, and this is clearly shown in the admission of the war party that not many of the reserves could be trusted at the front. Russia has been sowing the seed of national poison weeds for centuries, and now she is gathering anything but golden sheaves of internal peace and loyalty or of honesty in official places of trust.

The Llama Trying To Skip Out.

Llama to slip away to Northern or Mongolian China, presumably to turn a stream of cut-throats from that country against the English. But the scheme having been discovered, and discovered, too, to be a Russian device to treacherously cripple England's purpose in Thibet, the chances are that the Grand Llama will not escape, or, if he does and raises an army of Mongolians, Russia, rather than its royal puppets in Thibet will have to pay the penalty and pay all bills. Meanwhile the British army is gradually occupying the strategical points and opening up channels of commerce for trade and traffic to go and come in, and more fields for commercial expansion is at the bottom of King Edward's burning desire to civilize and Christianize the fanatical and immoral Thibetans.

The Turk Still Killing Christians.

for the butchery of Christians. Scarcely a day passes that does not record the slaying of "Christian dogs" by Turkish soldiers without any reason other than that they are not Mussulmans. But the bloody work must have the approval of the Christian nations, for not so much as a protest, except an occasional diplomatic "please quit," is filed with the Sultan against his murderous crusaders to put to death men and women who refuse to renounce Christianity for the Porte's brand of religion. To the shame of most Christian missionaries, they are willing to overlook the atrocities if they can get their own price for their destroyed church and personal property.

A LONESOME LITTLE GIRL.

By D. Z. Doty in Washington Star

My mother is the prettiest thing—
She still looks but a girl, folks say;
I wish she was a girl, for then
Together we could play!

I'm six years old—or will be soon—
And I'm all the child she's got;
And sometimes when 'tis lonely, why,
I wish there was a lot.

For mother has to work so hard,
A dancing nights and pouring tea
Each afternoon, she has no time
To romp and play with me.

I wish some nights she'd stay at home,
And, when it's time to go to bed,
She'd hear my prayers instead of nurse,
Then when it's dark I'd have no dread.

If she'd just let me hold her hand—
Her pretty hand with all its rings,
And I can go right off to sleep
If mother only sings.

But mother has no time, she says,
To humor little girls, 'cos she Gets tired out with balls and things
That keeps her up till three.

I hark each night for mother's step,
And then I call out loud and clear,
"Hope you'll have a lovely time,"
And, "Good-night, mother, dear."

But when she's gone, and down below
I hear the carriage door slam to,
I feel so lonely I could cry,
And sometimes, p'raps, I do.

TEMPE.

By Margaret Fuller in Century

My lover's eyes my mirror are Wherein I love to look.
Oh, who would sprite or dryad be
And only have a brook!

REDEEMED.

By Alice Cary in Good Housekeeping

God held a soul within his hand one day,
A fair young soul, with unfiled eyes for sight,
With ears for sound attuned, with hands aright
For action, all alert to work her way.
The lips unchorused in the earth's deep speech
Like bow that never shot an arrow out,
The virgin heart, athirst to be devout,
To any love which came within her reach.
God put that soul upon the world's highway—
The jostling crowd soon soiled her raiment fair;
The pipers, with rude jesting, bade her play.
The unloved ones of earth laughed at her prayer;
Till God, down reaching, saw her glance astray
And caught her back to rest within his care.
